

March for Life...

people believing what you believe. How could this be wrong trying to save lives?"

Sister Virginia Joy, S.V., director of the archdiocese's Respect Life Office, spent four days in the nation's capital, attending pro-life events, including the rally and March for Life.

"It's a time to fuel our enthusiasm and to see we are not alone. There is good hope for this mission," she said.

Sister Virginia added that Cardinal Spellman High School in the Bronx sent 108 students, making a second bus necessary for the first time, and 26 eighth-graders from Our Lady Queen of Angels School in East Harlem also attended.

"They could not believe the number of people there who were believing and praying for the same thing," said Stephanie Becker, principal of Our Lady Queen of Angels who made the trip with the eighth-grade class. "They came back feeling energized by the people they came in contact with to continue to fight for this incredible cause.

"We hope to do it again and expand it beyond our eighth-graders."

Kelly Quinde, a 15-year-old sophomore at Peekskill High School, attended her second march with teens from the Assumption parish in Peekskill.

"I'm here to march against abortion and show there is another option," she said. "I really did enjoy the rally because of all the stories I heard, and even hearing the president talk and give his opinion on this subject really meant a lot."

Father Vincent Druding, parochial vicar at Assumption, was one of the adult chaperones for a group of 45 from the parish, including many teens, who attended a youth rally at George Mason University in Virginia on Thursday evening and a youth rally and Mass Friday morning at Capital One Arena in Washington before participating in the rally and March for Life. Thirty additional parishioners arrived on Friday morning for the rally and march.

"I'm absolutely just pleased at the youth and zeal of the pro-life movement," said Father Druding, who said the teens are attempting to start a pro-life club at Peekskill High School.

Krismely Garcia took part in her fourth March for Life with a group of 18 on a bus from St. Elizabeth parish in the Washington Heights section of Manhattan.

"It was amazing to see a lot of people together for the same cause. We have to continue spreading the world to everyone, especially the youth," she said.

Jim Dugandzic, a parishioner of Sacred Heart in Suffern, took a five-hour bus ride with about 25 people representing several parishes in Rockland County.

"It's an important cause we need to change, and this year was an easy one because the weather was so beautiful," he said. "Sometimes you're wondering why you're doing it, and you come down here and you realize you're not the only ones. There are so many more."

SIGNS OF LIFE—Xiomara Lara and Krismely Garcia hold pro-life signs during the March for Life rally at the National Mall in Washington, D.C., Jan. 19. The two traveled from St. Elizabeth parish in the Washington Heights section of Manhattan on a bus sponsored by the archdiocesan Hispanic Ministry office.
