

Gastroenterology of the Rockies Expands into Downtown Denver

February 26, 2020—Gastroenterology of the Rockies, a leader in diagnosing, treating and preventing digestive disease in adults, is announcing expansion of services into the downtown Denver market.

Gastroenterology of the Rockies will have a full-time medical office presence at the Midtown Medical Office Building, conveniently located at 1960 N. Ogden St. in downtown Denver. In addition, Gastroenterology of the Rockies will offer outpatient endoscopy services at the Denver Surgery Center, located on the SCL Health - Saint Joseph Hospital campus, starting mid-March 2020.

Dr. Rohan Clarke, MD will lead the efforts supporting this expansion. Dr. Clarke has over 14 years of experience as a gastroenterologist and previously worked as an attending physician in Yonkers, New York before completing both his fellowship and advanced fellowship in Gastroenterology and Advanced Therapeutic Endoscopy from Columbia University in New York. Dr. Clarke specializes in therapeutic endoscopy including endoscopic ultrasound (EUS) and endoscopic retrograde cholangiopancreatography (ERCP) in addition to general gastroenterology (GI).

“We are excited to expand our services to the residents of Downtown Denver,” said Jason Richardson, COO. “This location will further our mission to serve patients with digestive disease and increase patient access to screening colonoscopies in the community to prevent and treat colon cancer.”

About Gastroenterology of the Rockies

For over 25 years, Gastroenterology of the Rockies has built a reputation for clinical excellence and patient loyalty and serves eight communities across the front range. It is our mission to be the providers of choice for diagnosing, treating and preventing digestive disease.