Todd Lasance in "NCIS: Sydney"

On the Australian beat: 'NCIS: Sydney' takes on a fresh case

It's certainly not uncommon for a successful series to inspire spinoffs, and other countries have gotten in on the act, with one example now helping a U.S. network's fall lineup.

"Law & Order: UK" and "The Amazing Race: Canada" are among the shows that have taken American concepts and applied them to other regions, and another is adapting a theme that already has been hugely successful internationally. "NCIS" has often been labeled "the most popular show in the world," based on its performance around the globe, but that hasn't stopped Australia from coming up with its own version. "NCIS: Sydney" has its CBS premiere Tuesday, Nov. 14, several days after getting its start in its home country.

Though the actors are likely to be as new to most U.S. viewers as the show itself, the premise will be familiar to fans, as another team of Naval Criminal Investigative Service operatives tackles cases involving members of the Navy. Marking the first time the franchise has gone global in such a way, the show may have taken a page from the "NCIS: Hawai'i" playbook by giving the squad a female leader — in this case Michelle Mackey, played by Olivia Swann ("DC's Legends of Tomorrow"). The ensemble cast also includes Todd Lasance ("The Secrets She Keeps"), Sean Sagar ("Our Girl"), Tuuli Narlde ("Mystery Road: Origin"), Mavournee Hazel ("Neighbours") and William McInnes ("Blue Heelers").

Any show that has "NCIS" in its title should get a respectable sampling, given the proven track record of the dramas that have borne it to date. The original series' next season will be its 21st, and though original star Mark Harmon ("Chicago Hope") has left it (he remains on as an executive producer), the current cast has kept the ratings strong — at least by today's measure of the broadcast TV universe. Sean Murray ("Harts of the West") and Brian Dietzen ("One-Minute Time Machine," 2014) date back to the start of the show, as did the late David McCallum ("The Man from U.N.C.L.E."), with Gary Cole ("The Good Fight") and Katrina Law ("Arrow") among those who have joined relatively recently.

"NCIS: Los Angeles" was the first spinoff, launching in the fall of 2009 and ending last May. Chris O'Donnell ("Scent of a Woman," 1992) and LL Cool J ("Deep Blue Sea," 1999) headed the cast throughout the 14-year run, and though Linda Hunt ("Silverado," 1985) was also a prominent star initially, her team-supervisor character Hetty was reduced to mentions or voiceovers in the show's later stages.

The filmed-on-location "NCIS: New Orleans" came next, starting in 2014 and led by Scott Bakula ("Quantum Leap") for its seven-season tenure. "NCIS: Hawai'i" succeeded the Big Easy-set show almost immediately, since it began in the fall of 2021, several months after the New Orleans-situated version closed up shop. Vanessa Lachey ("Love Is Blind") stars as Special Agent-in-Charge Jane Tennant as the series makes use of the infrastructure in the islands that CBS had set up for the "Hawaii Five-0" reboot. "Five-0" ended the year before production began on "NCIS: Hawai'i," and also made use of the "Magnum P.I." remake, which has since relocated to NBC.

Checking in with CHRISTINA HENDRICKS

Christina Hendricks gained a lot of fame through her association with "Mad Men," and now, she has moved on to a group of freedom-mad women.

The actress is among the stars of Apple TV+'s current series adaptation of "The Buccaneers," streaming new episodes Wednesdays. Based on Edith Wharton's final novel, it tells the saga of several young American women sent to England for a dose of culture in the 1870s ... but instead, the spirited visitors show the British a thing or two, or more.

Hendricks plays Mrs. St. George, the mother of two of the travelers (Kristine Froseth, Imogen Waterhouse); Alisha Boe, Josie Totah, Aubri Ibrag and Mia Theacleton portray the other rule-bending "Buccaneers." Despite its period setting, the drama uses modern music by such artists as Taylor Swift, Olivia Rodrigo and Brandi Carlile.

Hendricks' father likely would approve of her participation in "The Buccaneers," since he came from England — giving her both American and British citizenship. However, her roles have had a distinctly U.S. flavor, dating back to her early participation in a production of "Grease" in Twin Falls, Idaho (where she grew up). She continued stage work when her family moved to Fairfax, Va., where being in her high school's drama department gave her comfort and a sense of belonging.

After modeling in New York and overseas, Hendricks moved to Los Angeles and started auditioning for acting jobs. She landed many guest shots and a couple of brief series runs before the arrival of her watershed role, Joan Holloway in "Mad Men." Hendricks earned much critical acclaim and several awards for playing an advertising agency's office manager in the 1960s and early 1970s; her personal and professional growth mirrored that of many women of the era.

Later, Hendricks had a four-season run as one of several female friends and criminals in NBC's "Good Girls," but she also seems content to take parts in limited series — currently proven as she figuratively swashes her way through "The Buccaneers."
