A message from the South Dakota Department of Health

January 15 to January 21 - Page 3C

'Night Court' is back in session

Though she was a major fan of "Night Court" in her youth, little did Melissa Rauch know what a big role she would play in bringing it back.

The "Big Bang Theory" alum is a star and (with her husband Winston) an executive producer of the sitcom that returns to NBC in a revival premiering Tuesday, Jan. 17.

Rauch plays Abby Stone, who follows the path of her father Harry (the late Harry Anderson's character) as the judge in a nighttime New York courtroom. A very significant returnee is John Larroquette as prosecutor turned defense attorney Dan Fielding, the part for which the actor won four consecutive Primetime Emmy Awards.

Melissa Rauch and John Larroquette star in a revival of "Night Court," premiering Tuesday on NBC.

"I was excited about producing 'Night Court,' and I really thought I would just be behind the camera on it," the lively Rauch says. "Then, as we were developing it and once John came on board and the scripts came together, I thought, 'I'd be such a dummy not to play this role!' I feel grateful that I ended up making that decision. I know I would have been kicking myself."

The chance to act opposite Larroquette was a huge incentive for Rauch to appear in "Night Court," too. "It is a true dream come true to be working with him," she states. "Watching how he brilliantly executes every line that's given to him, he's never not wonderful. He's a masterclass in acting."

Rauch has a mutual admirer in Larroquette, who passed on returning to "Night Court" until she decided to act in it. He explains that mirrors Dan Fielding's return to court: "He's not a part of that system any longer, so he would not have even approached the idea, except that this woman is Judge Harry Stone's daughter. He finds that touching, and he decides that he can't leave her alone in that place at 3 in the morning. She's going to need backup, so he decides to join her. Reluctantly."

Among other new "Night Court" regulars, the singlenamed Lacretta succeeds Richard Moll's Bull as the court bailiff, with India de Beaufort as an assistant district attorney and Kapil Talwalkar as the court clerk. While aiming to generate something fresh, Rauch also wants to pay sufficient homage to the original "Night Court."

So does Larroquette, who admits to thinking often of such late former co-stars as Anderson, Markie Post and Charles Robinson while making the update. He recalls it being "very emotional the first week that we did this, because I would 'see' them sitting at the table." Larroquete notes that he suggested the rehirings of the original script supervisor, "so I could look at them occasionally and go, 'Do you remember when ...?' '

celebrity scoop

One of the most surprising developments in "9-1-1: Lone Star" last season was the kiss first responder Tommy Vega (Gina Torres) shared with brother-in-law Julius, despite her anger at him for not attending her husband/his brother Charles' funeral. It was not romantic by any stretch but merely a way of processing grief at the loss of a loved one – for both parties.

So as Season 4 of the Fox procedural opens Tuesday, Jan. 17, that episode is clearly in Tommy's past as she is ready to face the future and what it holds, which in the season premiere includes a potential love

"It comes out of the blue, quite by surprise, which is, you know, how life happens," the actress explains. "Which is nice. I think her trajectory was set up a little bit by the end of last season where she was ready to move on. And that ill-advised but very unkind encounter with her brother-in-law sort of helped push her out into the world a little bit."

The new season will also place the fire, police and emergency first responders of Austin, Texas, Company 126 in more bizarre situations, such as in the season opener where a deluge of frogs and heat burst strikes a carnival.

"Some of the crazier stuff that we do has actually happened ...," Torres notes. "Like the writers love to tell us, and sometimes they'll send us clips or something on YouTube that they got their idea from that actually happened. You'd be surprised."

Love & Marriage: DC

The Season 2 premiere introduces a new power couple to the group: Joi Carter and Clifton Pettie, who became instantly smitten on the Potomac iteration of OWN's "Ready to Love" series and were recently engaged. The series also continues to follow early empty-nesters Erana and Jamie Tyler, and authorentrepreneur Ashley Silva and her husband, on-air personality DJ Quicksilva. Viewers can also stay tuned for more of the group's friend, Winter Williams, who came into the circle like a blizzard last season.
