HBO's 'Tiger' a warts-andall portrait of a golf great

Tiger Woods was the type of singular talent that was preprogrammed for greatness seemingly from birth.

He gripped a golf club at two months old, was hitting drives on "The Mike Douglas Show" at two years and was repeatedly told by his father Earl that through golf he could make a difference. And, of course, he did.

His story is told in the two-part HBO Sports documentary "Tiger," airing consecutive Sundays, Jan. 10 and 17. Directed by Matthew Heineman ("The Trade") and Matthew Hamachek ("Meet the Patels"), the three-and-one-half-hour film follows the rise, fall and return to the game of the golf icon through never-before-seen footage and interviews with those who know him best, including former caddie Steve Williams, golf legend Nick Faldo, Earl Woods' biographer and close friend Pete McDaniel, Woods' first true love Dina Parr and Rachel Uchitel, the woman at the center of the sex scandal that would alter the course of Woods

Jeff Benedict and Armen Keteyian's book "Tiger Woods" served as a resource for the film, which was made without the participation of the Woods camp.

Of course, the accolades on the links speak for themselves: 82 PGA Tour wins, 15 major championships (including five Masters titles), 10-time PGA Tour top money winner, 11-time PGA Tour Player of the Year and a host of other laurels.

And the driving force behind that success, at least at the outset, was Earl Woods.

He was easily the biggest influence of Tiger's childhood and young adulthood, putting all his resources into molding his son into a champion. The documentary details Earl's love of the game and how that was passed on to Tiger. But as Tiger's career took off and he matured as a man, he grew away from his father.

Part of that was due to Earl's womanizing. One scene in the documentary tells of how he didn't bother to hide his indiscretions from his son, which disgusted Tiger.

Of course, the apple didn't fall far from the tree and Tiger himself had some very public carnal escapades. The film goes into his "unchained" behavior in Las Vegas and the relationships that resulted, as well as the dalliance that would eventually end his marriage to wife Elin Nordegren, with Rachel Uchitel, a New York night-club manager, in 2009.

Personal problems, including sex and substance addiction, injuries, surgeries and subpar performances would follow, leading to his fall from golf's elite. The documentary details his years of personal and professional struggles as well as his stirring comeback and victory at the 2019 Masters, capped by a touching hug with his young son Charlie on the 72nd hole, thus mirroring his own embrace with dad Earl after he won his first Masters title 22 years earlier.

"The Resident" can't ignore the current times health-wise, and it's not about to.

When the Fox medical drama returns for its fourth season Tuesday, Jan. 12, it will resume in the early days of the coronavirus pandemic. While the doctors suffer losses due to COVID-19, the series also advances its timeline relatively quickly, enabling hospital colleagues and longtime loves Conrad and Nic – played by Matt Czuchry and Emily VanCamp – to proceed with their wedding.

"I think the right word for it is 'responsibility,' " says pleasant "Gilmore Girls" and "The Good Wife" alum Czuchry. "If we didn't address the pandemic, we would be irresponsible, We do that in Episode One, but it's equally important to note that at the end of that episode, we're in a post-pandemic world, And that follows through in Episodes Two, Three and so forth.

"Everyone is overwhelmed with the pandemic in their personal lives, so if people are kind enough to spend their time with us, I hope it will be an escape," Czuchry reasons, noting that having the wedding as the coda to a COVID-intensive story is "the balance we've tried to strike. Everyone's struggling, but at the same time, we're hopeful that we're going to get through it and come out on the other side and find something better."

Czuchry recalls his elevator ride to his "Resident" audition with series co-creator and executive producer Amy Holden Jones, and telling her the pilot script reminded him of doing "The Good Wife." He reflects that both have "a moral ambiguity. Not everything is all good nor all bad, and I love how we address that through the medical genre."

Mountain Monsters Those grizzled explorers from the Appalachian Investigators of Mysterious Sightings (AIMS) reassemble for a salutary season dedicated to the memory of their founder, John "Trapper" Tice, who died in December 2019 after a lengthy illness. As the action resumes in "The Wolves of West Virginia," the team reads a letter Tice left for them before his death, in which he set up a new adventure for them. They set out for West Virginia's Tygart Valley, equipped with his journal and guided from the grave by their former leader.

The new episode "The Magic of Callas" revisits superstar soprano Maria Callas's 1964 return to the opera stage in London, reprising one of her signature roles: the fiery heroine of Puccini's "Tosca." Callas hadn't performed in public for more than two years due to a turbulent social life, and fans feared that jet-set lifestyle had damaged her voice. This London performance, seen via filmed excerpts from the opera's second act, cemented her stature as a true legend.

Movie: In the Heat of the Night

Director Norman Jewison's first-rate 1967 mystery earned Oscars for best picture and best actor for Rod Steiger, who plays a bigoted Southern police chief forced to investigate a murder with a black Philadelphia police detective (Sidney Poitier). Ray Charles performs the wonderfully moody title song: Lee Grant and Warren Oates co-star. The film.

This new two-hour special takes a deep dive into the life of Philadelphia pastor Gary Heidnik, who lured six women and then held them captive in his basement. During November of 1986, Heidnik brutalized his prisoners, determined to mold them into sex slaves whose primary function was to bear his children. Josefina Rivera and Jackie Askin, two of the four survivors from that ordeal, take viewers on a chilling ride through a real-life horror story.
