New survey finds 7 in 10 teens are struggling with mental health

Amidst COVID-19 an overwhelming number report feeling anxious, stressed, or depressed as they call for more openness on mental health issues

(June 17, 2020) – A new survey commissioned by National 4-H Council, and conducted by the Harris Poll, finds that 7 in 10 teens are struggling with their mental health in the wake of COVID-19. More than half of those surveyed shared that the pandemic has increased their feelings of loneliness, with 64 percent believing it will have a lasting impact on their mental health. The survey, conducted in May 2020, is among the first to examine the impact this unprecedented public health crisis has had on U.S. teens.

In 2019, the WORLD HEALTH ORGANIZATION announced suicide as the third leading cause of death in teens 15 to 19.

Their findings determined that the “consequences of not addressing adolescent mental health conditions extend to adulthood, impairing both physical and mental health and limiting opportunities to lead fulfilling lives as adults.” Today, as the country grapples with a global pandemic, economic downturn, and recent conversations on racial injustice, teens are being met with added stressors and seeking out new ways to cope.

The SURVEY, which polled over 1,500 youth between the ages of 13-19 nationwide, was commissioned by National 4-H Council and conducted by The Harris Poll to gain a deeper understanding of the state of teen mental health and to gather youth perspectives on the issue as 4-H aims to empower young people with the resources and support to address their health and well-being.

Key findings from the survey include:

81% of teens say mental health is a significant issue for young people in the U.S.

NEW SURVEY/ from pg.13

“Young people are facing a whole new world and set of challenges today and it’s our job to listen and respond,” said Jennifer Sirangelo, president and CEO of National 4-H Council.

“This survey provides a vital glimpse into the uncertainties many teens are feeling every day. In 4-H, we aim to empower teens with resources and guidance enabling youth to tackle life’s challenges today and become leaders in their lives, careers and communities as they grow into responsible adulthood.”

More than half of the teens surveyed shared that they feel pressure to hide their feelings, and they want that to change. An overwhelming majority of teens are calling on America to talk more openly and honestly about mental health and wish for schools to teach more on the issue.

“During these months of being away from my 4-H club and friends, I’ve definitely felt disconnected,” said Micah Palacios, a 4-H teen from Texas who developed a mental health program in her community. “Coronavirus has been overwhelming and being on social media can be too much for me at times. It’s been a lot to deal with. That said, my work on mental health awareness through 4-H has given me tools to address these concerns in healthy ways for me and for others in my community. I hope to continue teaching and spreading mental health awareness so everyone can find productive ways to cope.”

With programs focused on issues such as substance abuse prevention and mental health, 4 H, powered by Cooperative Extension—a community of more than 100 public universities across the nation, aims to help young people build a firm foundation of social-emotional health. By understanding how to take care of their minds and inner being, 4-H helps young people develop good decision-making and strong interpersonal skills which is key to holistic well-being.

New survey finds teens believe access to healthy food is a basic human right

In the wake of COVID-19, youth AIM to solve the food insecurity problem

4-H youth take the lead to solve the current food crisis and celebrity chefs Carla Hall, Trisha Yearwood, Anne Burrell show their support in new cookbook to equip families with health-conscious meals and more

A new survey commissioned by National 4-H Council found that 88 percent of U.S. teens believe having access to healthy food is a basic human right, though a majority say that unhealthy options are easier to access and more cost-effective. As COVID-19 continues to negatively impact the economy and create impossible situations for families struggling with food security and access,

4-H teens from across the country are stepping up their efforts to solve the problem through service and cooking.

37 MILLION AMERICANS, INCLUDING 11 MILLION CHILDREN FACED FOOD INSECURITY IN 2018 and these numbers are growing exponentially amid the COVID-19 crisis. The survey, which was completed prior to the current global pandemic, highlights that healthy eating choices are determined by access and necessity. More than a third (35%) of those surveyed say “healthy food is not easily accessible to me,” while a majority (84%) say, “junk food is too accessible.”

“Many young people and their families don’t know where their next meal is coming from, especially during this current global crisis, and choosing healthy options that are cost effective only becomes that much more difficult for economically challenged communities across the country,” said Jennifer Sirangelo, president and CEO of National 4-H Council. “This survey shows that today’s youth have an expressed interest in leading healthier lifestyles, and we’re pleased to serve and ensure that kids and their communities develop the healthy habits they need to thrive.”

The SURVEY, which polled over 1,500 youth between the ages of 13-19 nationwide, was commissioned by National 4-H Council and conducted by The Harris Poll as part of the 4-H Healthy Habits Program. The program has reached over one million youth from across the country with nutrition education and physical activity, with an intentional focus on populations who face challenges in achieving positive health outcomes.

HEALTHY FOOD/ from pg.14

Teens are interested in being active participants in solving the food crisis, as a majority said they would like to/or have donated money and/or volunteered within their communities.

68 percent say they satisfy their hunger with unhealthy foods because it's more accessible to them at school than healthy food.

Most teens wish there were healthier food options in their community (74 percent) and at home (69 percent), while 1 in 4 reported having to drive 30 minutes to buy groceries (25 percent).

84 percent surveyed say schools should teach students more about what makes food nutritious, while over half also believe supermarkets should incentivize health food choices through healthy grab & go options (55 percent).

Most teens (66 percent) are spending more time deciding what they want to watch on Netflix and YouTube, than thinking about what they eat.

73 percent of youth say that they think they would eat healthier if healthy foods tasted better.

Since 2012, teens in the 4-H Healthy Habits Program have been finding ways to teach their communities about healthy living habits. But as the need for food access has grown in recent months, they're finding new ways to serve with:

Fresh produce boxes that are being created with the surplus crops farmers may otherwise destroy in Florida,

A food delivery program to ensure students in need of meal assistance continue to get meals while out of school in Illinois,

A community garden that provides free produce to community members in Georgia, and Blessing Boxes which are small sustainable food pantries for community members to walk up and grab nonperishables in Louisiana.

"Developing healthy eating habits starts at a young age and it can be hard to find the right resources when they're not readily available in schools, grocery stores or other community gathering places" said Janya Green a 4-H Healthy Habits teen. "Through 4-H's Healthy Habits program, I've been able to make a real difference in teaching kids and families in my community about making healthy choices, without creating a financial burden."

In addition to getting food to those most in need, 4-H teens are making sure that healthy living habits continue to be a priority for American families. In response, the National 4-H Council released a free, digital cookbook, 4-H FRESH CHEFS, as a resource to encourage youth and their families to eat a balanced diet and make nutritious meals at home. The cookbook features a number of easy and affordable recipes from 4-H youth, celebrity chefs, and 4-H supporters including:

Carla Hall, Celebrity Chef, 4-H Healthy Habits Program Ambassador and Tennessee 4-H Alumna
Anne Burrell, Host of Food Network's Worst Cooks in America: Celebrity Edition and Cookbook Author, New York 4-H Alumna

Trisha Yearwood, Award-Winning Singer, Cookbook Author, Executive Producer and Host of Food Network's Trisha's Southern Kitchen, Georgia 4-H Alumna

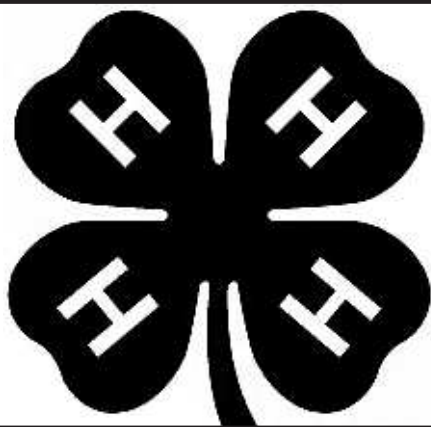

"It's important for young people to build a lifetime of healthy eating habits early on, through a thoughtful and balanced approach towards food," said Celebrity Chef and 4-H Healthy Habits Program Ambassador Carla Hall. "The 4-H Healthy Habits Program exposes youth to essential life skills such as health conscious cooking, eating, and decision-making that can impact their futures as well as the future of their communities. I'm glad to partner with 4-H and share my passion for mindful eating and living with the next generation of young leaders."

Leading Executive of Meredith Corporation elected to National 4-H Council Board of Trustees

National 4-H Council has announced the election of a new Trustee to its Board, Alysia Borsa, who will bring years of experience developing data-driven marketing strategies to inform and grow 4-H's reach and impact.

Borsa, who is Meredith Corporation's Executive Vice President/Chief Business & Data Officer, has held various leadership roles in highly-regarded companies including Comcast and Accenture. As a passionate advocate for women and a strong believer in active, honest debate, Borsa will be a compelling voice in support of positive youth development.

"It's an honor for me to join National 4-H Council's Board of Trustees," said Borsa. "Meredith has a long history with 4-H. I look forward to working with Council's Board and leadership team to help grow and empower the leaders of tomorrow."

"As an innovative and experienced leader of a consumer-facing organization, we are grateful to Alysia for joining National 4-H Council's Board of Trustees to bring her marketing knowledge and talent as well as her experience in the areas of insights and analytics to 4-H," said Jennifer Sirangelo, president and CEO, National 4

H Council. "Borsa's unique perspective and expertise will be a valuable addition as we continue our work to increase investment and participation in Cooperative Extension's 4-H program."

Alysia Borsa
Executive Vice President/
Chief Business & Data Officer, Meredith Corporation,
New York, NY

Alysia Borsa is EVP/Chief Business & Data Officer of Meredith Corporation, the leading multi-platform media company focused on women — reaching more than 190 million American consumers every month and nearly 95 percent of all women in the United States. Borsa oversees corporate and digital sales, ad operations, data and insights, and corporate marketing across the company's network of more than 40 national brands. She is charged with furthering Meredith's competitive marketplace advantages during a dynamic and rapidly changing time in the evolution of the business.

With experience in the areas of insights and analytics, product marketing, technology, advertising effectiveness, and business strategy, Borsa most recently served as Meredith's Chief Marketing and Data Officer. In this role she successfully integrated and transformed the company's data and insights capabilities, incorporated a consumer focus into its marketing strategy, and created differentiated data-driven offerings for the company's partners. She joined Meredith in 2011 as VP of Product, a newly created role in which she set strategic direction and execution of key initiatives to grow the organization's mobile and data capabilities.

Prior to Meredith, Borsa worked in the technology and telecom industries. She was Head of Partner Integration & Portfolio Planning at Nokia, where she led business development and product growth for new subscription services. She also held senior positions at Comcast, where she was product marketing lead for digital and cross-platform services, and at Accenture, where she was a strategy consultant in the tech and telecom markets.

Borsa currently serves on the boards of directors of the IAB and AdLedger, an industry blockchain trade group. Borsa earned a Bachelor of Business degree at Wilfrid Laurier University and an MBA from the University of Western Ontario in Canada. She resides in New York with her husband and children.
