'Billions'

Season 5 lets Maggie Siff cash in

"Billions" is about to give Maggie Siff a considerable payoff.

The Showtime drama about money and power has challenged the actress' character – psychiatrist and performance coach Wendy Rhoades – in recent years, almost sending her to prison over an investment gone way wrong, then exposing her spicy after-hours life to her great mortification. However, Wendy reclaims her personal power as "Billions" starts its fifth season Sunday, May 3.

Not only does she have to unite the warring camps of reunited hedge-fund rivals Bobby "Axe" Axelrod and Taylor Mason (Damian Lewis, Asia Kate Dillon), she makes a decision about her ruptured marriage to New York Attorney General Chuck Rhoades Jr. (Paul Giamatti). Around that, risky alliances and potential betrayals are off the chart, even by "Billions" standards.

"I think this is the season where she puts herself back together again in a way that feels good to her, morally, emotionally and maybe even spiritually," Siff says of Wendy. "She's determined that she really needs to make a life without Chuck at the center of it, and also that her (business) life at AxeCap is determined by her deeper motivations. We see her on a good path."

With Julianna Margulies ("The Good Wife"), Corey Stoll ("House of Cards") and Roma Maffia ("Disclosure") as Season 5 additions, Siff embraces "Billions" newcomers: "Because we shoot in New York, we have amazing access to all of these incredible actors. It's always like a breath of fresh air, and it inspires us to show up each day with everything we have."

"Sons of Anarchy" alum Siff meets often with "Billions" creators and executive producers Brian Koppelman and David Levien to get, and sometimes give, a sense of where Wendy is going: "As the actress, you start thinking, 'Am I supposed to be real here, or am I supposed to be double- or triple-crossing somebody? What do I need to know in order to play this right?""

"Billions" will take a break after seven episodes, since as with many series, the coronavirus pandemic shut down production. The plan is to finish and televise the rest of Season 5 later this year, though Siff admits picking up right where the filming left off might feel unusual.

"I think the show has always reflected the times interestingly," she reasons. "After (the 2016 election), I felt like there was a bit of a question about how people would feel about watching a show about billionaires, now that there was a billionaire in the White House. In subtle ways, Brian and Dave have been very smart about how the themes (of 'Billions') have adapted to the times, and I'm sure they will continue to be incredibly sensitive to that."

Some actors need to come down from a character at the end of a season, particularly if it's very intense.

Joanne Froggatt certainly felt that way in expelling sexual assault victim Laura Nielson from her psyche at the end of filming "Liar."

In the psychological thriller series, which airs its second and final season Wednesdays on SundanceTV (and streams its first on Sundance Now), Froggatt stars as a schoolteacher dealing with the dual traumas of being raped by the father (Ioan Gruffudd) of a student, then standing as the accused when the man is murdered.

The role required the Golden Globe winner (as Anna Bates on "Downton Abbey") to conjure a lot of anger and outrage, which she says took its toll.

"You know, I don't like feeling angry," the 39-year-old British actress says with a laugh. "I guess nobody does, but she's really angry and rightly so. She's angry at the way she's been treated and the injustice of what happened to her, so that was something I was glad to sort of release after I'd finished playing her, definitely."

Those feelings didn't extend to her co-star, Gruffudd (the "Horatio Hornblower" movie series). The two became fast friends while working together on "Liar," and Froggatt reports that relationship exists off-set as well.

"I spent a lot of time with him and his wife and kids and stuff when I've been out in L.A., where they live," Froggatt says. "And yeah, it's great. We just became really good friends, which is lovely. You know, it happens a lot but it doesn't always happen, so it's nice when it does."

Name: Joanne Froggatt Birth date: August 23, 1980

Birthplace: Scarborough, North Yorkshire, England

Residence: Buckinghamshire, England

Family ties: Separated from her husband of eight years,

James Cannon

Westworld Last season, many critics and viewers alike detected a sophomore slump in this highconcept sci-fi thriller, as each episode often seemed more confounding than the before. Happily, Season 3 has marked a welcome course correction, as the story follows the Al character Dolores (Evan Rachel Wood) away from the titular park and into the wider world. There, a construction worker named Caleb (new series regular Aaron Paul) is teaching her that humans are less two-dimensional than she thought.

The season ends tonight in a finale called "Crisis Theory."
