Report details changes to Big Sioux watershed

Changes needed to prevent pollution to river in Brookings County.

By Joshua Haiar South Dakota Searchlight

South Dakota environmental regulators are accepting public comments on a new set of draft pollution reduction targets for a 10-mile segment of the Big Sioux River in Brookings County.

The document from the Department of Agriculture and Natural Resources proposes "total maximum daily loads," which are the levels of pollution a waterbody can suffer and still meet water quality standards. About 450 square miles of land form the watershed for the river segment from Volga to south of Brookings.

The river segment is too polluted to support some kinds of warmwater fish, according to the department. The problem is "total suspended solids," including soil that washes into the river. Roughly 73% of that soil comes from farms.

"The watershed is used extensively for agriculture, which comprised 88% of the land area in 2017," the department's report says.

The report also notes that wetlands, forests and native grasslands have declined in the watershed.

Fish affected

Travis Entenman is the managing director of Friends of the Big Sioux River. He said suspended solids affect plant and fish life.

"Excessive sedimentation reduces oxygen levels and blocks sunlight that our underwater plants need," he said. "If we had clearer water, more fish — outside of carp — would be able to thrive."

University of South Dakota Sustainability and Environment Professor Mark Sweeney said research shows suspended solids in the Big Sioux have increased in the 2000s compared to the 1970s and '80s. He said the problem is especially bad for filter-feeding fish.

"They basically choke on the

BROOKINGS — The Brookings School Board took action on a several facilities issues during Monday night's meeting — including declaring the Fifth Street Gym surplus property. Keith Fodness, director of facilities for the district, said their facilities and construction committee recommended the school no longer hang on to the gym.

"Through the committee meeting last Friday, the decision was made to recommend declaring that building surplus — as it is no longer useful to the district and to have an appraisal done on the property," Fodness said. "The law allows you to use three real property owners in your district to do that appraisal, or you could hire an appraisal company. I think you'd probably get a better market value if you were to have an appraiser do it."

The board voted to have the superintendent hire a professional for the gym appraisal.

Donations of diapers, wipes will be accpeted.

BROOKINGS — New Beginnings Birth Center will hold a diaper drive during National Diaper Need Awareness Week, Sept. 23 – 29. The donated diapers and wipes will be given to the Harvest Table and the Brookings Area United Way to help area families who face diaper need.

Diaper need is defined as the lack of a sufficient number of diapers to keep a child clean, dry and healthy. On average, babies require 12 diapers a day and toddlers eight diapers per day. The American Academy of Pediatrics states each child will use 3,000 diapers in the first year and a total of 8,000 diapers before potty training. Average monthly cost of diapers per child ranges from $70 to $80.

Schools: Will be selling old middle school gym

"We do feel like it's surplus because we have two new gyms - two new competitive gyms in the new schools — and so this facility doesn't have as much need in our district," Board President Teresa Binkley said. "If we weigh out the cost of maintaining it to what we can actually use it for, it doesn't balance out."

Per an Aug. 7 article in the Brookings Register, the city's Park & Recreation Board has discussed acquiring the Fifth Street Gym. They estimated such a hypothetical acquisition would cost the city a minimum of $2.6 million in improvement costs alone — plus between $100,000 and $150,000 in yearly operating costs.

"The district really doesn't have the resources to maintain it and continue to operate it," board member Wes Tschetter said. "Also though, it's in our interest that whoever assumes the building or ends up with the building has a financial responsibility to make sure that it's in good repair and functional and not an eyesore to the community. That is an absolute must in our planning for what we do in the future."

Declaring the building surplus property will not impact any ongoing activities at the gym.

"I just wanted to mention that no current use will be changed for anyone doing this," board member Keli Books said. "All the city leagues and everything volleyball, everything that's planned in there — going to ... surplus doesn't mean that we still don't maintain ownership and still don't have all activities as planned."

In other facilities matters, the board approved hiring MJ Dalsin of Sioux Falls to perform roof repairs on the high school, the Career and Technical Education building — formerly the East Central Multi District building · Camelot Intermediate, Dakota Prairie Elementary and the Mickelson Middle School.

"The repairs would be $51,800. I recommend that you do those, and (MJ Dalsin) has the manpower this fall to get those repairs completed before the snow flies. The CTE building is by far the worst building in your fleet and there are a couple sections up there that could very well come loose if we had a big storm," Fodness said. "They don't give that roof a whole lot of life without repairs or potentially some re-roofing very soon."

He said the roof repairs are capped at a maximum of $51,800 - but it's possible they may come in under budget.

"This repairs the known issues on these roofs — the leaks that have been identified, the small tears in the fabric, the bridging. This puts them back in order, and it's just preventative mainte-

He recommended the board adopt a long-term plan to deal with future roof maintenance and possible replacement.

"Down the road, I'd like to put in front of you a list that says you should take care of this roof within this many years and here's how much we need to plan to spend," Fodness said. "Put that in your five-year capital outlay budget moving forward, and you can plan for it and just get on a rotation. The roof is the most important part of the building."

The board also voted to hire CO-OP Architecture of Sioux Falls to conduct renovations of the high school science rooms — a timely project that coincides with the roof repairs.

"With the science room addition or renovation — that's in a section of the building that has a few problems with the roof. If you go in those science rooms, look up and you'll see water stains. You can't renovate a section of your building with a bad roof," Fodness said.

The approved renovations are limited to just the high school science rooms.

"If we decide to do a comprehensive review of the high school - which will have to be done at some point — that would be a totally different conversation than this conversation right now," Books said. "We know that is of some need down the road — just having a better grip on all of our facilities — but that is not what we're utilizing CO-OP for."

one of the volunteers of this year's sale, explained. "Fellowship Hall in our church is full and the classrooms are full. This year we had a church member move, so she donated quite a bit. We've had the death of a lady who had lived here 70 years and her son cleaned out her house and donated things. That's where the vintage and antique things come from.

"And then we had another person who passed and his family brought in quite a few things. And a family from Brookings is moving into assisted living; so we've had three or four families that are doing major donations. We have people bringing in smaller donations, such as clothing that has been outgrown."

Norman has some simple advice for those coming to the sale: purchase it when you find it. First-come, firstserved means that what you would like to buy on Friday might not be there when you return later.

go through things and if some has to be tossed, we do that," Norman explained. Think of that action as a sortof grass-roots quality control.

"I've been impressed with the quality of things that have come in this year," she added. "We have had great community support. In a rural area you do have that. If it's somebody in need of something, or the community or the school, it gets done. And we make sure that nothing's going to waste."

Anything that's left over will be given to Orphan Grain Train in Milbank: It bills itself "as a 501c3 Nonprofit Christian volunteer network that shares personal and material resources with needy people in America and around the world. sediment," Sweeney said. He added that other fish dependent on good visibility are also affected.

The segment of the Big Sioux is one of many polluted waterways in South Dakota. A recent report showed about 80% of the rivers, streams and lakes tested in South Dakota are too polluted for at least one of their intended uses.

A goal, not a mandate

The department's recommendations for the 10-mile Big Sioux segment say no water sample should have more than 158 milligrams of suspended particles per liter, and the average should stay below 90 milligrams over any 30 days.

The plan also includes recommendations: relocating livestock away from streams, protecting grasses along streams, conserving wetlands and sloughs, and promoting soil health practices that reduce sediment runoff. It also advises continued funding and marketing of existing financial incentives for those practices.

Existing incentives include a $3 million state program paying landowners to grow and maintain grass strips along the river and its tributaries. The state pays up to $575 per acre for cropland and up to $157 per acre for pastureland enrolled.

Incentives are the primary way the state attempts to achieve cleaner waterways. Jay Gilbertson, manager of the East Dakota Water Development District, based in Brookings, said the state does not mandate action by individual polluters.

"The department says, 'We don't want to make people do anything," he said. "Well, that's the problem then."

Entenman agreed, saying he welcomes the development of the total maximum daily loads and the report about where the pollution originates. But, he added, "We need to make sure there is follow-through and these issues are being remedied."

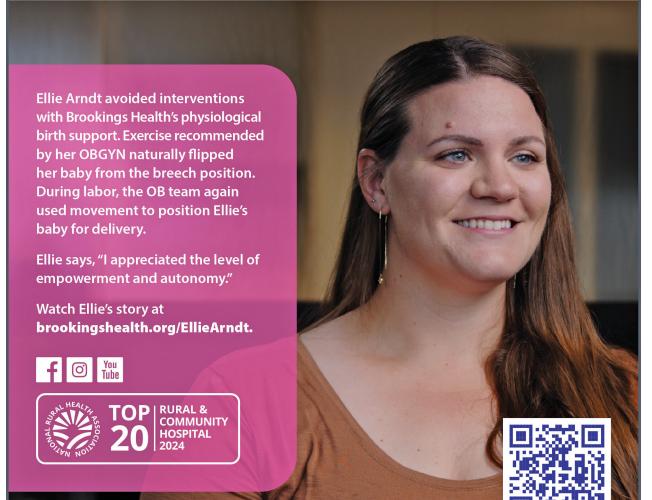

Lubeck, a Marisa spokesperson with the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency's Region 8 Office (which includes South Dakota), sent a statement explaining states and local governments are responsible for ensuring plans are followed.

"The plan provides a foundation to support future implementation, which is led by state and local organizations rather than the federal government," she said.

Public comments on the draft document must be submitted by Sept. 28 and may be emailed to DANRmail@state.sd.us.

provide enough diapers to keep a baby or toddler clean, dry and healthy," said Brookings Health System Obstetrics Director Michelle Sand, RN. "Babies and toddlers require diapers as a basic need, yet because diapers are considered hygiene items, they are not covered by governmental safety-net programs like WIC or SNAP."

Diapers are critical to a baby's health and overall well-being. Children who do not receive consistent diaper changes are more susceptible to infections, diaper rash and other significant health problems. In addition, because children without diapers cannot attend daycare or early childhood education, diaper need can contribute to adverse educational outcomes.

Diaper need also impacts families. Parents cannot go to work if they lack diapers to leave with their child at daycare. The National Diaper Bank Network and Huggies recently conducted a study that found parents who struggled with diaper need missed on average four days of work per month. Needing diapers can lead to increased stress, financial hardship and food insecurity for families.

Individuals would like to contribute to New Beginnings Birth Center's diaper drive may purchase items from the Amazon wish list located at https://rb.gy/heg7by. Alternatively, diapers of any size and wipes may be dropped off at Brookings Health System's reception desks during National Diaper Need Awareness Week.

SDSU Extension working to bolster rural child care needs in S.D.

BROOKINGS — South Dakota needs more child care providers, and SDSU Extension is part of a growing collaboration to meet that need.

A 2024 Committee for Economic Development Child Care in State Economies report said 45% of South Dakota's young children are in paid child care and that South Dakota has one of the highest female labor forces in the nation. With a high rate of both parents working and a scarcity of child care in rural communities, parents have to travel farther to make it work.

In her role as an SDSU Extension early childhood field specialist, Audrey Rider has long championed the benefits of child care in rural communities. In addition to the economic benefits, Rider said quality child care is a vital part of early childhood education and formation.

"Child care is an important profession that we need to build our future generations. It is not babysitting," Rider said. "I see it as such a rewarding career with lifelong benefits to communities and

She and fellow SDSU Extension experts recently surveyed three rural communities to assess their child care needs: Beresford, Lead/Deadwood and Webster. Once the survey data has been analyzed, SDSU Extension will work with those three communities to address their unique child care needs.

In Highmore, a dedicated group of volunteers secured a $300,000 grant in March from the Governor's Office of Economic Development as part of Gov. Kristi Noem's Investment Plan for Child

To prepare to submit the grant, the committee completed SDSU Extension's Building Highly Effective Boards and strategic planning programs. The 10-person committee completed approximately 20 hours of training and leveraged that into securing the second, much larger grant. SDSU Extension community vitality field specialists Kara Harders and Kellie Kolb said they provided education and resources, and the community did the rest.

"We did not write their grant for them, we are in the business of equipping leaders and communities to do great things," Kolb said. "It's about that education piece, because education is lifelong and ongo-

SDSU shatters research expenditures record for second consecutive year the second consecutive year, South Dakota State University has broken its research expenditures record. Research expenditures for fiscal year 2024 reached $84 million — a 13.5% increase from last year's record of $74 million.

'SDSU faculty, staff and students continue driving the leading edge of discovery and innovation — to the public's great benefit," said Daniel Scholl, vice president for research and economic development.

SDSU researchers receive funding from a variety of sources including federal, state, industry and internal grants. These grants are often allocated on a competitive basis, with project proposals being selected for their quality and/or impact.

Scholl noted that an increase in research expenditures signals a growing research profile that is trusted and capable of solv-

Research proposals for fiscal year 2024 totaled just over $270 million — also up from the previous year of $155 million.

Research expenditures are one of two benchmarks the Carnegie Classifications of Institutions of Higher Education use to differentiate research institutions. To be classified as "R1" — the highest classification — a university must have at least $50 million in research expenditures each fiscal year.

SDSU is currently classified as "R2" but is in pursuit of R1 classification.

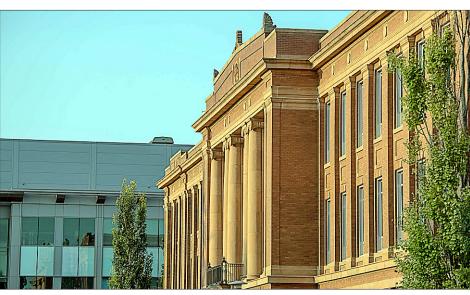

growing "SDSU's impact is what you would expect from an aspiring Carnegie R1 university and creates a vibrant experience for students at all levels," Scholl added.

Some of the notable sponsored research projects from the past year include the restoration of native plants in the Northern Great Plains. This National Park Service-backed project was led by Lora Perkins, lead faculty for SDSU's Native Plant Initiative and an associate professor in the Department of Natural Resource Management.

has undertaken a statewide effort to develop more resilient electrical grids for rural communities. This National Science Foundation-backed project is an ongoing collaborative effort with universities across the United States.

In the College of Natural Sciences, associate professor Natalie Thiex received $312,813 from the National Institutes of Health to gain insights into inflammation.

Josh Reineke, associate professor in the College of Pharmacy and Allied Health Professions and director of the Haarberg

Drug, Disease and Delivery Research Center, has been developing nanoparticle-based therapies to treat and eradicate mycobacterium tuberculosis.

In the College of Nursing, associate professor Mary Isaacson has been working to increase palliative care access for all South Dakotans. Through an efficacy trial backed by the National Institutes of Health, Isaacson has been developing culturally responsive messaging for Native Americans who need palliative care.

Don Burger, associate professor in the School of Design, conducted a walkability study for communities in South Dakota. This work resulted in a community handbook on how to approach walkability which will come out later this fall.

In the Ness School Management and Economics, associate professor Andrea Leschewski conducted a cost-benefit analysis of expanded food and nutrition education programs by utilizing biomarkers of chronic disease risk. Leschewski's study was backed by the U.S. Department of Agriculture's National Institute of Food and Agriculture.

Amber Jensen, a lecturer in the School of English

Interdisciplinary Studies, has been conducting a National Endowment for the Humanities-backed project to support teachers of dual credit composition courses. The project has included summer workshops for faculty to create new materials for dual credit introductory composition courses.

"Growing research expenditures is a marker of SDSU's leadership, but research expenditures tell only part of the story," Scholl said. "Some of SDSU's research, scholarship and creative projects do not require substantial funding grants and are completed with little direct expenditures. It is exciting that our innovation and discovery work extends beyond engineering and the sciences to the social sciences, arts and humanities, to better serve the public.

The three largest contributors to SDSU's expenditures record were the College of Agriculture, Food and Environmental Sciences; the College of Natural Sciences; and the Jerome J. Lohr College of Engineering.

OPINION

Beg pardon: Did the country change its mind?

■ Opinions have changed on whether Gerald Ford showed cowardice or courage.

Andrew Jackson, once almost universally admired as a personification of refreshdemocratic values, now is considered a prosecutor of genocide. Ulysses Grant, once portrayed as a shiftless drunk and political dunce, is a symbol of generosity and prudence. Woodrow Wilson, once hailed as the idealist of his age, is considered a racist. Dwight Eisenhower, once disparaged as a presidential mediocrity principally interested in his putting game, is remembered for putting America on a strong footing for the coming decade

But the most remarkable transformation of the modern age may involve a president in office a mere 17 months and the controversial step he took at the end of his first month — a decision that arguably cost him his presidency but might have helped the country recover after two years of Watergaterelated strife.

Sunday is the 50th anniversary of a Sunday that began in infamy, Gerald Ford's pardon of Richard Nixon.

The general reaction was summed up by Washington Post reporter Carl Bernstein in a call to his reporting colleague Bob Woodward: "The son of a bitch pardoned the son of a bitch."

The Ford approval rating, at 71% at the end of his first week in office in the middle of August, fell to 60% just after the pardon in September, then to 50% by month's end — en route to 37% in the following January, according to the Gallup Poll.

Seven years later, the country was evenly divided, with 46% supporting ▼ David Shribman the pardon and 46% opposing it. By 1986, 39% still opposed the pardon, but a majority (54%) approved.

Jimmy Carter earlier criticized the pardon, saying in July 1976 that he would not have pardoned Nixon "until after the trial had been completed in order to let all the facts relating to his crimes be known." Six months later, he began his inaugural address with this sentence, which didn't mention the pardon but spoke of the result Mr. Ford hoped it would provide:

"For myself and for our nation, I want to thank my predecessor for all he has done to heal our land."

Senator Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts immediately branded the pardon "the culmination of the Watergate cover-up."

A quarter-century later, the committee awarding the John F. Kennedy Presidential Library and Museum's Profiles in Courage Award received a high school student's essay arguing Ford was an exemplar of political cour-

Two committee members, David Burke, the former CBS News president, and David McCullough, the presidential historian who through biographies of John Adams and Harry Truman single-handedly changed the nation's view of them both, said the student was onto something. Paul G. Kirk, former chairman of the Democratic National Committee and later a senator, resisted. Kennedy was hesitant but finally came around. Ford was presented with the award in 2001.

"I finally was OK with it, and had a conversation with President Ford, who said that this was redemption and satisfaction," said Kirk. "I saw his pride in vindication."

Ford wrote in his autobiography that the Nixon pardon "wasn't motivated primarily by sympathy for his plight or by concern over the state of his health," adding, "It was the state of the country's health at home and around the world that worried me."

The country, at first, didn't buy his argument. "If Ford can be faulted, it's how it was done, and how it was packaged," said Richard Norton Smith, the author of 2023's "An Ordinary Man: The Surprising Life and Historic Presidency of Gerald R. Ford." "Ford felt twinges of sympathy for Nixon. He believed Nixon's health, both physical and mental, was impaired. He thought there was only one way to get Nixon off his daily schedule and, critically important, to change the story in the media."

Ken Khachigian, a longtime Nixon aide, said Ford succeeded in that goal. "The wailing about the pardon would last only so long, but, while [Nixon critics still] had Nixon to kick around, it was as a long-distance appetizer, not an on-site feast."

John Robert Greene, a retired Cazenovia College historian who was one of the first scholars to examine the papers for his 1995 book, "The Presidency of Gerald R. Ford," was a college-age critic of the pardon.

But when I got into Ford's papers, I found that the negotiation was more about getting rid of the tapes and papers that still filled the White House," he said. "Ford wanted that stuff out of there. But most important, every press conference since he became president was consumed by questions about Nixon. It was beating at him. He didn't think he could do anything as president unless he pulled the Band-Aid off the wound and pardoned him."

Then there is Timothy Naftali, the first director of the federal Richard Nixon Presidential Library and Museum, who felt the pardon was premature. "But I respect Ford and what he tried to achieve," he said. "It would have been useful for the public to see a criminal indictment, though I know enough about the story to understand that it was unlikely.'

Presidential son Steve Ford also changed his mind. Speaking at a 2009 Kennedy Library retrospective on the Ford presidency, he said, "I raised my hand when this whole thing came up and said, 'Dad, you know, people are going to kill you. They're going to crucify you. You can't do this. I mean, Nixon, he was wrong."

Then he added a poignant reminis-

"I remember sitting with him and talking. And he explained that a president was like a father of a family and had to lead a family. And I remember him looking at me. I caused a lot of problems in my household. He looked at me and he said, you know, 'Steve, if I prosecuted you for everything you did to divide our family ... carried it out to the letter of the law, our family would be ripped apart. But I, as your father, give you grace and mercy at times for the betterment of the family.'

The grace and mercy eventually reached Bob Woodward, on the other end of the "son of a bitch" phone call from Carl Bernstein. In a July 2014 Washington Post panel, he called the pardon "an act of courage." The country had come around.

can kill. That was my wife's main message when she addressed the Rapid City Council at its Aug. 19 meeting, speaking on behalf of Moms Demand Action for Gun Sense in America on the need to promote safe handling and secure storage of firearms.

Without safe gun handling and storage, terrible things can and do happen.

A few hours after my wife made that point to the council here in Rapid City, it was exemplified in the most tragic of ways across the state in the state's largest city, when a teenager was fatally shot with a 9 mm handgun that had been stolen from an unlocked vehicle the previous week.

Investigators are still unraveling the details of what happened around 2:30 a.m. Central time Aug. 20, when the handgun went off in a Sioux Falls home striking 17-year-old Deontaé Boehrns in the face. He died at a Sioux Falls hospital.

A 33-year-old woman and her 13-year-old son were arrested in the case. The woman faces multiple charges, including accessory to manslaughter. It appears that a group of minors had gathered at the home, and that the 13-year-old was handling the gun when Boehrns was

However the case plays out and whatever the exact details, it's another example of the horrid potential of guns that aren't stored securely.

Which is exactly what took my wife, Mary, and several other volunteers for Moms Demand Action, a grassroots-volunteer arm of the national nonprofit Everytown for Gun Safety, to the Rapid City Council to continue their work to prevent gun violence.

"One proven risk-reduction step to prevent gun violence that adults can take is secure gun storage," Mary said. "Secure gun storage prevents kids and other unauthorized users from accessing guns. This makes our homes, communities and schools safer."

My wife spoke of the "gold standard" of secure gun storage: They should be unloaded, locked and stored separately from ammunition.

Such responsible storage saves lives. And it likely

The message my wife brought to the council was timed just prior to the start of the new school year.

"School is starting tomorrow in Rapid City," Mary said. "And we encourage everyone to think about the risks that unsecured guns in homes and vehicles pose to kids and to our community."

With school starting across the nation, Everytown for Gun Safety and its affiliated organizations promoted Aug. 26-30 as SMART Week. SMART is an acronym encouraging people to SECURE all guns in homes and vehicles, MODEL responsible gun behavior, ASK about unsecured guns in other homes and vehicles, RECOGNIZE the role of guns in suicides and TELL friends and neighbors to be SMART.

According to data from Everytown, up to 500,000 guns are stolen each year in this nation. In 2020, more than half of gun thefts were from vehicles.

Each year, Everytown statistics say, 700 kids die by suicide with a gun. And each year since 2015, from 300 to last year's high of more than 400 kids under 18 unintentionally shot themselves or someone else.

Everytown tracks those shootings across the nation through media reports. So far this year Everytown has confirmed 168 unintentional shootings by children, 56

Intentional shootings by teenagers are another potentially deadly part of the unsecured-gun problem, as shown by Wednesday's tragic shooting at a high school outside of Atlanta, Georgia.

A 14-year-old student was arrested in the case and charged with using an assault-style rifle to kill two students and two teachers. Eight more students and one teacher were hospitalized. The suspect's father was also arrested in the case for allowing his son to possess the firearm used in the mass shooting.

In June, U.S. Surgeon Vivek Murthy declared gun violence a health crisis in America. And gun violence is the nation's No. 1 cause of death for children and teens.

Careless handling and storage of firearms is an important part of that problem. Leaving firearms in an unlocked vehicle is beyond careless. It's reckless. If a firearm must be left in a vehicle, that vehicle should be locked. But even locked vehicles aren't the best option for safe gun storage, says Rapid City Police Department spokesman Brendyn Medina.

"Responsible gun ownership starts with being accountable for a firearm at all times, and a vehicle is not a gun safe," Medina said. "It is not a safe practice to leave a firearm in an unattended vehicle. It's always best practice to take firearms with you for storage in a safe

Stolen guns end up in the wrong hands, which can lead to unintended shootings or more criminal activities.

"Gun thefts are highly concerning for law enforcement," Medina said. "In most cases, stolen firearms are not recovered until they're associated with another criminal act."

The link between stolen guns and more serious crimes was shown in Rapid City eight years ago, when three guns stolen from a Rapid City business were recovered in Colorado from suspects involved in serious crimes.

One of the stolen guns was taken from a suspect killed in an officer-involved shooting, after the suspect was involved in a carjacking and high-speed chase in Aurora, Colorado. The other two were recovered after a murder suspect was arrested following a standoff in a Lakewood, Colorado, motel.

Wherever and however guns are stolen, they end up in the wrong hands with lethal potential.

RCPD uses public-information work to help reduce gun thefts from vehicles in the city. In 2022, 85 guns were reported stolen from unlocked vehicles. With the public-information campaign in 2023 that number dropped to 48 for the year and sits at 17 so far in 2024.

So public-information work can make a difference, whether it comes from professionals like those with the RCPD or volunteers like my wife and the millions of others like her across the nation. It can lead to more responsible gun storage, in homes and vehicles. It can prevent gun thefts or unauthorized use. It can save lives.

And that's something we'd all rather imagine.

Congress honors the 13 troops killed during Afghanistan withdrawal

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Speaker Mike Johnson on Tuesday presented Congress' highest honor the Congressional Gold Medal — to 13 U.S. service members who were killed during the disastrous withdrawal from Afghanistan, even as the politics of a presidential election swirled around the event.

Both Democrats and Republicans supported the legislation to posthumously honor the 13 U.S. troops, who were killed along with more than 170 Afghans in a suicide bombing at the Abbey Gate at Kabul's Airport in August 2021. President Joe Biden signed the legislation in December 2021. On Tuesday, the top Republican and Democratic leaders for both the House and Senate spoke at a somber ceremony in the Capitol Rotunda, hailing the lives and sacrifices of the service members.

Senate Majority Leader Chuck Schumer called on the lawmakers gathered to "ensure the sacrifices of all our servicemembers were not in vain."

"We must care for them and their families and defend the values of freedom and democracy they so nobly fought for," Schumer, a New York Democrat, said.

But rather than a unifying moment, the event took place against the backdrop of a bitter back-and-forth over who is to blame for the rushed and deadly evacuation from Kabul. Johnson, a Louisiana Republican and ally of Republican presidential nominee Donald Trump, scheduled the ceremony just hours before the first debate between Trump and Democrat Kamala Harris.

"They lost their lives because of this administration's catastrophic withdrawal from Afghanistan," Johnson said at a news conference minutes before the ceremony.

Then as the speaker opened the ceremony, he took another jab at how the Biden administration has defended its handling of the final months of America's longest war.

"To the families who are here, I know many of you have yet to hear these words, so I will say them: we are sorry," Johnson said. "The United States government should have done everything to protect our troops, those fallen and wounded at Abbey Gate deserved our best efforts, and the families who have been left to pick up the pieces continue to deserve transparency, appreciation and recognition."

Republicans on the House Foreign

House Foreign Affairs Committee Chairman Michael McCaul, R-Texas, speaks to reporters about his panel's Afghanistan Report and the findings of its three-year investigation into the U.S. withdrawal from Afghanistan, at the Capitol in Washington on Monday. He is joined by Republican lawmakers and families of the military members who were killed by a Taliban bomber during the evacuation.

Affairs Committee also released a scathing investigation on Sunday into the withdrawal that cast blame on Biden's administration and minimized the role of Trump, who had signed the withdrawal deal with the Taliban.

White House national security spokesman John Kirby on Monday criticized the House report as partisan and one-sided and said it revealed little new information as well as contained several inaccuracies. He noted that evacuation plans had started well before the pullout and the fall of Kabul "moved a lot faster than anyone could have anticipated."

He also acknowledged that during the evacuation "not everything went according to plan. Nothing ever does."

'We hold ourselves all accountable for that," he said of the deaths.

Teen injured in Neb. high school shooting

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Omaha police arrested a suspect about half an hour after a shooting Tuesday that critically injured a teenage boy at a high school in Nebraska's largest city.

Families rushed to Omaha Northwest High School after the shooting was reported by the school resource officer during lunch at 12:23 p.m. Omaha Police Deputy Chief Sherie Thomas said officers from several departments quickly responded to the school and found the victim inside.

Thomas said police believe the shooting was an isolated incident between two students. The 14-year-old suspect was arrested three blocks away about 30

Parents tearfully embraced their kids in the parking lot as the first few started to come out of the school after 1 p.m. The rest of the students were reunited with their families over the next couple of hours.

Thomas said a 15-year-old boy was critically injured in the shooting and rushed to a hospital. She said the victim was in stable condition several hours after the

One student told KETV that he was coming back to school after lunch and ran as fast as he could when he heard screams and saw people running because he didn't want to die.

Two nearby Catholic high schools — Marian and Roncalli high schools — were also locked down after the shooting, but that was lifted after the arrest.

Devon DeMott told the Omaha World-Herald that he raced to the school from his home a few blocks away as soon as his son texted him there had been a shooting.

"As fatherly instinct, I jumped in the car and headed up there," said DeMott, who was glad to see a significant police presence when he arrived.

The school district canceled all Tuesday evening activities at Northwest High and all classes on Wednesday. Students are scheduled to return Thursday.

Billionaire to conduct private spacewalk

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — A daredevil billionaire rocketed back into orbit Tuesday, aiming to perform the first private spacewalk and venture farther than anyone since NASA's Apollo moon-

Unlike his previous chartered flight, tech entrepreneur Jared Isaacman shared the cost with SpaceX this time around, which included developing and testing brand new spacesuits to see how they'll hold up in the harsh vacuum.

If all goes as planned, it will be the first time private citizens conduct a spacewalk, but they won't venture away from

Considered one of the riskiest parts of spaceflight, spacewalks have been the sole realm of professional astronauts since the former Soviet Union popped open the hatch in 1965, closely followed by the U.S. Today, they are routinely done at the International Space Station.

Isaacman, along with a pair of SpaceX engineers and a former Air Force Thunderbirds pilot, launched before dawn aboard a SpaceX Falcon 9 rocket from Florida. The spacewalk is scheduled for Thursday, midway through the five-day

But first the passengers are shooting for way beyond the International Space Station — an altitude of 870 miles, which would surpass the Earth-lapping record set during NASA's Project Gemini in 1966. Only the 24 Apollo astronauts who flew to the moon have ventured farther.

The plan is to spend 10 hours at that height — filled with extreme radiation and riddled with debris — before reducing the oval-shaped orbit by half. Even at this lower 435 miles), the orbit would eclipse the space station and even the Hubble Space Telescope, the highest shuttle astronauts flew.All four wore SpaceX's spacewalking suits because the entire Dragon capsule will be depressurized for the two-hour spacewalk, exposing everyone to the dangerous environment.

Isaacman and SpaceX's Sarah Gillis will take turns briefly popping out of the hatch. They'll test their white and blacktrimmed custom suits by twisting their bodies. Both will always have a hand or foot touching the capsule or attached support structure that resembles the top of a pool ladder.

Israel says it likely killed an American activist by mistake

RAMALLAH, West Bank (AP) — The Israeli military said Tuesday an American activist killed in the West Bank last week was likely shot "indirectly and unintentionally" by its soldiers, drawing a strong rebuke from U.S. Secretary of State Antony Blinken and the activist's family.

Israel said a criminal investigation has been launched into the killing of Aysenur Ezgi Eygi, a 26-year-old activist from Seattle who was taking part in a demonstration against settlements in the Palestinian territory. Doctors who treated Eygi, who also held Turkish citizenship, said she was shot in the head.

Blinken condemned the fatal shooting when asked about it at a news conference in London, and said the U.S. would make clear to its ally that such actions are "not acceptable."

"No one — no one — should be shot and killed for attending a protest," he said. "Israeli security forces need to make some fundamental changes in the way they operate in the West Bank."

Eygi's family in the U.S. released a statement saying "we are deeply offended by the suggestion that her killing by a trained sniper was in any way uninten-

During Friday's demonstration, clashes broke out between Palestinians throwing stones and Israeli troops firing tear gas and ammunition, according to Jonathan Pollak, an Israeli protester who witnessed the shooting of Eygi.

Pollak said the violence had subsided about a half hour before Eygi was shot, after protesters and activists had withdrawn several hundred meters (yards) away from the site of the demonstration. Pollak said he saw two Israeli soldiers mount the roof of a nearby home, train a gun in the group's direction and fire, with one bullet hitting Eygi.

Israel said its inquiry into Eygi's killing "found that it is highly likely that she was hit indirectly and unintentionally by (Israeli army) fire which was not aimed at her, but aimed at the key instigator of

Obituary

Lowell Slyter Aurora

Oct 23, 1941 - Sept 8, 2024

Dr. Lowell Slyter, age 82 of rural Aurora, SD, passed away at Avera McKennan Hospital in Sioux Falls on Sunday, Sept. 8, 2024.

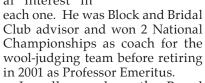

Funeral services will be 11 a.m, on Thursday, Sept. 12, at Brookings First Assembly of God. Visitation will be from 5-7 p.m, on Wednesday, Sept, 11, at Eidsness Funeral Home. Burial will be 2 p.m. on Friday, Sept. 13 in Fontana, Kansas. In lieu of flowers, memorials are preferred to the family so they may be given to a donation of their choice.

Dr. Lowell Slyter was born near Havre, Montana, on Oct. 23, 1941. He was the youngest of four sons and moved to Paola, Kansas, at age four. He was active in 4-H and FFA showing sheep, cattle and horses. After graduating from Paola High School, Lowell earned a BS degree in Animal Science at Kansas State University in 1964. During college he competed in several rodeo events and his love of horses continued his entire life. Lowell married his college sweetheart, Sondra Furey, in 1964 in Manhattan, Kansas. He earned his MS degree at the University of Nebraska in 1966 and returned to K-State for his Ph.D. degree in 1969.

In 1970, Lowell took a research position with South Dakota State University and was stationed in Rapid City. In 1972, Lowell and Sondra moved to Brookings, South Dakota, for a teaching and research position at SDSU where pioneered research in fall lambing techniques. In addition to teaching numerous classes, "Doc" Slyter advised many students, taking personal interest in

Lowell Slyter

Lowell served on the Board of Trustees for the South Dakota Retirement System for 19 years.

Lowell was a relentless promoter of the sheep industry via regional broadcasting and national conference appearances. He was editor of The Sheep and Goat Research Journal for 8 years.

Lowell was an IFYE delegate to Jamaica and continued his international work helping to build churches, schools and housing in Spain and Guatemala. Lowell loved church. He taught Sunday School for over 40 years and served as deacon, worship leader and outpost commander for the Royal Ranger program for boys. Lowell also loved music. He played trombone, guitar and was known as "The Singing Cowboy" performing in nursing homes for many years.

In February of 2024, Lowell and Sondra celebrated 60 years of marriage and he lived on their acreage near Aurora, South Dakota, until his homecoming on Sept. 8, 2024. He will be remembered for his unshakable strength of character, his relentless commitment to excellence, and his unbridled drive to teach and serve.

Lowell is survived by his wife Sondra, two sons Trent and Travis and his brother David. He was preceded in death by his father Harry, his mother Helen and his brothers Leslie and Stanley.

Thoughts on fall alfalfa and winter wheat varieties

Fall alfalfa management

As fall approaches and temperatures decrease, it's important to decide whether that last late cutting is really worth it. I like to bring this up each year to remind growers about the trade-offs that come with late alfalfa cuttings.

Alfalfa requires about 500 uninterrupted growing degree-days to winterize-this translates to roughly six weeks (depending on temperatures). Alfalfa winterization typically begins about three weeks prior to the average date of the first 32°F frost. In South Dakota, this usually means late September - early October (check https://www.weather.gov/unr/aff for frost dates in your area).

Alfalfa plants determine winterization based upon day length and cooling average daily temperatures, hence the first average frost guideline. Plants cut during the winterization period will attempt to put on regrowth; this takes away from their ability to accumulate root proteins and carbohydrates, which may cause poor stand and vigor the following spring (think of a bear preparing for hibernation). It's important to weigh the odds of an additional cutting against potential stand losses.

To avoid winter injury next spring, it is best practice to leave the alfalfa in the field at this point per the frost date in most of South Dakota. However, if you had late cuttings this year (as many did) and are in need of feed there are a few things to

1) For those looking to cut late in an effort to extend a high quality forage crop, cutting during winterization is a risk to weigh. The more stress an alfalfa stand sees during the growing season (ie: drought, insect pressure, disease, etc.), the more apt it is to experience winterkill after a late cutting. If a field was cut multiple times (4+), it is more likely to have winter-kill issues than those that were cut fewer times. Younger standing, well-established, winter hardy/ disease-resistant varieties may tolerate a late season cutting better than older stands or those that experienced heavy pest pressure over the growing season. Well-drained soils, adequate soil fertility, and insulating snow covers are also helpful in the way of avoiding alfalfa winterkill. If the need for feed and price of hay outweigh the risk of stand loss next year, a late season cutting may be a risk you're willing to take.

2) Another consideration is harvesting after the winterization period; technically, it should be safe to take a cutting after winterization. This correlates to cutting after a killing freeze (23-24°F for several hours) after the plant is dormant. This is not as stressful to the plants as cutting during winterization, and can be a viable option for those who need feed and do not want to risk next year's stand. However, remember that you should leave 5-6" of stubble, which leaves some plant tissue and helps to reduce erosion. Leaving soils bare over winter is a recipe for erosion and will likely result in less snow cover with little plant residue on the soil surface.

Alfalfa stands may last several years in various parts of South Dakota. Taking care of stands and skipping late fall cuttings can help prolong plant vigor and overall stand for years to come; however, challenging years (like this one in many parts of SD) may have created forage shortages and require producers to make tough decisions. For more information on alfalfa see the forage page on our website (extension.sdstate.edu).

Winter wheat variety and forage trial results

SDSU Extension to host sheep shearing school

BROOKINGS — South Dakota State University Extension will teach the skill of sheep shearing to current and prospective producers this fall.

The Sheep Shearing School is from Oct. 12-14, 2024, at the SDSU Sheep Research and Teaching Unit near Brookings. It is $200 per person, and registration is required. To register, visit the SDSU Extension Events page and search "sheep...

Professional sheep shearers will provide hands-on training in safe animal handling, maintenance equipment and repair, wool quality and how to manage a sheep shearing business.

Throughout the school, participants will practice the handling and shearing techniques on live sheep. Jaelyn Whaley, SDSU Extension sheep field specialist, said it's a valuable opportunity to learn from world-class profes-

In 2022, there were 1.75 million pounds of wool produced in South Dakota at a total value of about $2.1 million, according to the U.S. Department of Agriculture National Agricultural Statistics Service. As the wool market becomes increasingly dependent on high-quality wool, Whaley said producers can improve their profits by learning about wool quality.

"This school is an opportunity to learn so much more about the sheep and wool industry than just shearing a sheep," she Whaley said more sheep shearers are needed in the region. For those interested in starting a shearing business, it can be a full-time profession or a way to diversify their existing operation.

"If somebody's willing to travel to different operations, it's definitely an opportunity," Whaley said. "You can do as much or as little as you want to."

Wisconsin health officials recall eggs after a salmonella outbreak

(AP) — Wisconsin health officials initiated a recall of eggs following an outbreak of salmonella infections among 65 people in nine states that originated on a Wisconsin farm.

The Wisconsin Department of Health Services said in a statement recently that among those infected by salmonella are 42 people in Wisconsin, where the eggs are believed to have been sold.

The eggs were distributed in Wisconsin, Illinois and Michigan through retail stores and food service distributors," the department said. "The recall includes all egg types such as conventional cage-free, organic, and non-GMO, carton sizes, and expiration dates in containers labeled with 'Milo's Poultry Farms' or 'Tony's Fresh Market." The U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention confirmed in a statement on its website that 65 people in nine states were infected by a strain of salmonella, with 24 hospitalizations and no deaths as of Friday. The states include Wisconsin, Illinois, Michigan, Minnesota, Iowa, Virginia, Colorado, Utah and California, the agency said.

The egg recall was undertaken by Milo's Poultry Farms LLC of Bonduel, Wisconsin, the CDC said.

"Anyone who purchased the recalled eggs is advised to not eat them or cook with them and to throw them away. Restaurants should not sell or serve recalled eggs," the Wisconsin health department said.

The department advised anyone who ate the eggs and is experiencing symptoms to contact a health care provider. Symptoms include diarrhea, abdominal pain, fever and vomiting lasting for several days, the statement said. The U.S. Department of Agriculture in July announced new measures to limit salmonella in poultry products. The proposed directive included requiring poultry companies to keep salmonella levels under a certain threshold and test for the presence of six particularly sickening forms of the bacteria, three found in turkey and three in chicken.

Bacteria exceeding the proposed standard and identification of any of the strains would prevent poultry sales and leave the products subject to recall.

The CDC estimates salmonella causes 1.35 million infections annually, most through food, and about 420 deaths. The Agriculture Department estimates there are 125,000 infections from chicken and 43,000 from turkey each year.

GARFIELD BARK! BARK! BARK!

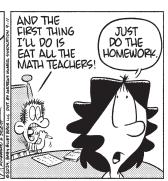

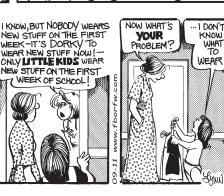

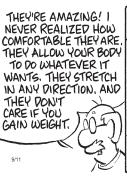

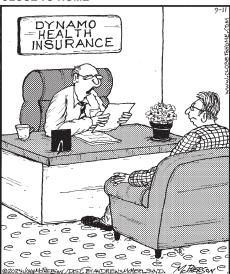

'According to our background check,you had an infected hair follicle in third grade. That puts you in our high-risk category.

"This time try not to miss my bat.'

Bridge

By PHILLIP ALDER

Barbra Streisand said, "I arrived in Hollywood without having my nose fixed, my teeth capped or my name changed. That is very gratifying to me."

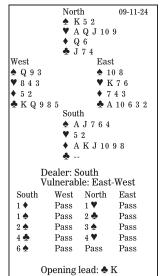

Declarer might wish a low card were changed to a much higher one. Can you imagine wishing a high card were changed into a lower one? In today's deal, how should South plan the play in six spades after ruffing West's club-king lead? Would it make a difference if the spade jack were the three? North's two-club rebid was fourth-suit game-forcing. South's two-spade continuation showed at least 5-6 in spades and diamonds. (If South had been only 5-5.

he would have opened one spade, not one diamond.) After North indicated spade support, four clubs and four hearts were control-bids (cuebids) showing first-round controls in those suits and interest in a slam.

There is a temptation to play a spade to dummy's king, then to finesse the jack. Here, though, when it loses, declarer needs the heart finesse. When that fails also, the contract is down.

It is true that if East has queen-fourth of spades and no heart king, this line works well. But whenever spades are 3-2 (which is much more likely), the contract is laydown without any finessing. Change the spade jack to the three. Now South draws two rounds of trumps, then plays on diamonds, discarding all of dummy's heart losers. He takes five spades, one heart, five diamonds (one is ruffed by West) and a late heart ruff on the board.

Dear Abby

Dear Abby: A close male friend, "Will," ended our friendship without warning. I didn't know he had such strong feelings about my current arrangement. I have been dating a married man, "Bart," whose wife suggested he get himself a girlfriend if he wanted sex/intimacy/ companionship. She also told him she would "never want to sleep with him again." It has been 10 years since they were last intimate or even shared a bed. They don't live together; Bart lives in his guest house. They share a son, which is why he doesn't want to leave

As a parent, I understand. It's why I stayed in my own marriage for so long. The circumstances are less than ideal and something I never thought I'd be a part of, but I haven't felt this wonderful in years. My ex-husband and I were never this compatible. When I'm with Bart, it's magical, and I believe it's mutual.

For this choice of mine, Will has severed our friendship. He did it via text. I'd told him about it two weeks earlier, and he advised me to be careful. He called Bart and me "cheaters," but it's not exactly like that. I'm deeply hurt over this loss. I want to know if Will is in the wrong

or if I am. — No Cheater In Arizona

Dear No Cheater: Does who is "right or wrong" matter at this point? Your friend Will does not approve of your affair with Bart because of his marital status and has chosen to distance himself. That's his privilege. You made an adult decision to engage in this relationship, and it has cost you a friend. Live your life, but don't be shocked if others also feel the way Will does.

Dear Abby: I've been dating a wonderful guy for the last six months. Our relationship is great, but he has an ex who is much younger than us (a 16-year age gap). He started seeing her while she was pregnant by someone else. He stayed with her until the baby was 3, but, given the circumstances, he continues to get the baby for weekends, etc. He is not on the birth certificate, but the baby knows only him as her dad.

My problem is the ex.

She constantly calls or texts him for money or to say she bought things for the little girl. She has called him to come over to hang out, and, most recently, asked him to co-sign for a new car for her.

I'm not OK with the lack of boundaries, and I have said so. He hears me and has told her several times to back off, but she doesn't listen. It's causing arguments between us. The child isn't his actual child, but that fact obviously isn't changing anything. Should I walk away? — Third Wheel In The East

Dear Third Wheel: Your boyfriend is clearly attached to the little girl. You can't change that, nor should you try. That said, he is still with you in spite of the fact that his ex may be trying to get him (and his financial support) back. Whether you should grit your teeth and tolerate it isn't something I can answer. Your boyfriend can, however, and whether you should walk away is a question you should be asking him.

Age-related muscle loss can be halted with diet, exercise

By Mike Roizen, M.D. and MEHMET Oz. M.D.

Many people find that they're hitting their stride around age 35. But the body has other ideas. That's when the gradual loss of muscle mass begins. Folks typically experience a 1% to 2% loss of muscle annually up to age 60, then it accelerates to around 3%. This creates a condition called sarcopenia. And while muscle is lost, folks often substitute fat for muscle mass. That ups the risk for chronic health problems. For example, a recent study found that folks who have excess fat on their arms are 18% more likely to develop Alzheimer's and Parkinson's than folks with low levels of fat in that area!

But you don't have to accept the slow erosion of your strength and accumulation of excess fat.

1. Get enough protein. A meta-review of studies concluded that older adults should eat more than the recommended amount of protein to counter muscle loss. The researchers suggested a 180pound man eat 82 grams to 130 grams daily.

2. Do strength training (using resistance bands, your body weight, dumbbells, or weight machines) three to four times weekly.

3. Enjoy high-protein snacks and muscle-building supplements. Nuts, peanut butter, chia seeds and edamame satisfy hunger and help build muscles. Creatine, an amino acid made from arginine, glycine, and methionine, doesn't build muscle itself, but along with resistance training and a healthy diet, it may offset muscle loss, according to Harvard Medical School.

Sioux Valley remains unbeaten with sweep of MCM

BY ANDREW HOLTAN The Register

VOLGA - The Sioux Valley volleyball team improved to 6-0 on Tuesday night as the Cossacks swept McCook Central/Montrose at the Cossack Center.

The first two sets came easy for the Cossacks as they won by scores of 25-13 and 25-7. Sioux Valley trailed early in the third set but came back to earn the

"I think we were firing on all cylinders," said

Sioux Valley head coach Jill Vincent. "We passed the ball really well and our setters kept mixing it up."

After winning the first two sets with ease, the Cossacks fell behind 5-0 in the third set. Sioux Valley battled back and went on an 8-0 run in the middle of the set and were then able to put the Cougars away.

Vincent liked the way her team handled the adversity early in the third set.

"Usually if we get down 4-0 I call timeout, but they kind of had a look in their eyes like, we can do this. I think the upperclassmen on the court at the time really said 'hey, we can do this one at a time.' We went on like an 8-0 run and it's nice to see us on that side of things rather than the other side," Vincent said.

Sioux Valley had 38 kills as a team and 35 assists. The Cossacks had 45 digs and 10 service aces.

Adison Renkly led the Cossacks with 12 kills, 11 digs and four service aces. Kaedyn Sapp had six kills and 13 digs. Keyra Kruse had seven kills and Emma Gorvin and Lacev Langland each had five kills and two aces. Sunny Hesby had 22 assists and Machaela Gerasch had 10 assists. Caitlin Russell had 13 digs.

Vincent liked the way her players played at the net on Tuesday night.

"Keyra [Kruse] and Lacey [Langland] had really good nights and it was nice to see them get some really good kills. Adison and Kaedyn set the tone. They started off and got a bunch of kills at the beginning of the second set and everyone started to work hard around them. When they can set the standard and the rest of them can play up to that, it's pretty nice," Vincent said.

It was the fourth-straight sweep and the fifth of the season for the Cossacks. Up next Sioux valley will head to Baltic to play in the Big East Conference Tournament on Thursday. Vincent said she thought her team did a good job of cleaning some things up after sweeping Castlewood on Saturday, but there are some other things she'd like the Cossacks to work on ahead of the conference tournament.

"After the last game we wanted to clean up our front row free balls, and I think we did that tonight. We probably have to work on getting our blocks closed and playing around those blocks. Also some of the passing out of the back row. Our passers in the back row are a little frustrated with the digging situation, but I thought they did great tonight," Vincent said.

Twins bash Angels 10-5 behind homers by Farmer, Wallner, Santana

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Kyle Farmer hit a threerun home run in the second inning to provide a well-timed jolt for a sputtering lineup, and Matt Wallner and Carlos Santana also went deep for the Minnesota Twins in a 10-5 victory over the Los Angeles Angels on Tuesday night to stop a four-game losing streak.

Pablo López (15-8) won his fourth straight start on the strength of 10 strikeouts over seven innings without an earned run, withstanding a three-run homer by Zach Neto in the fifth that cut the lead to

The Twins (77-68), who had lost 15 of their previous 21 games, preserved a three-game edge with 17 games to go in the chase for the last of three AL wild-card spots in the playoffs that has tightened with their recent slide. Boston, Detroit and Seattle, the closest competitors, all began the night at 73-71.

Wallner hit a solo shot in the third and a two-run double with two outs in the sixth that chased Angels starter Griffin Canning

Trevor Larnach reached base all four times he batted, with a single and three walks, and scored three times for the Twins, who also got two RBIs from Ryan Jeffers and a two-run shot by Santana for his team-best 21st homer.

After scoring only four runs on their four-game skid and just 13 runs over their last seven games, the Twins had 10 runs on 10 hits to help send the Angels (60-85) to their 21st loss in their last 30 games. López has been Minnesota's most valuable player since the All-Star break, stabilizing an injury-thinned rotation that's currently stocked with three rookies. He would've escaped the fifth inning without any damage, but a two-out error by second baseman Eduoard Julien on a bobbled ball and hesitated throw preceded an RBI single by Taylor Ward and the three-run blast by Neto for his 21st homer this season.

TRAINER'S ROOM

Angels: 3B Anthony Rendon went to the injured list for a third time this season, with an oblique strain. RHP Ben Joyce, the team's current closer, was also placed on the IL with shoulder inflammation.

Twins: CF Byron Buxton (hip inflammation), SS Carlos Correa (plantar fasciitis), RF Max Kepler (patellar tendinitis) and OF Manny Margot (groin strain) took live batting practice from minorleaguers before the game. Correa, who has been out the longest at 49 games,
