Toby Sanderman and Uche Agada in "Running Point"

Caught the rebound: A new team president steps up in 'Running Point'

Ownership of a professional basketball team might not be everyone's idea of a family business, but in the new Netflix comedy series "Running Point," premiering Thursday, Feb. 27, the Gordon family's line of succession names an unexpected new president of the Los Angeles Waves.

The 10-episode series stars Kate Hudson ("Glass Onion," 2022) as Isla Gordon, a driven executive who is surprised but prepared when she is tapped to run the franchise after her brother (Justin Theroux, "White House Plumbers") crashes out and is forced to resign from the position.

Isla is the only sister in the Gordon family C-suite and the Waves are the greatest team in the history of the game, so there is a lot of weight on her shoulders as she takes on the towering title. The pressure to carry it well comes from all angles, including from her brothers.

Scott MacArthur ("The Righteous Gemstones") is Isla's brother Ness, a single-season professional player who is now determined to redeem his reputation as the general manager of the Waves. Ness may have been forgettable on the team roster, but he's motivated to make his mark in the Waves' offices.

"The Other Two" star Drew Tarver is Sandy Gordon, the chief financial officer of the Waves, whose non-athleticism set him apart from the rest of his family growing up. Now, Sandy's intelligence is an integral part of the team's success — money well spent shows on the court.

It's a good feeling to know that your family has your back, even if, as in Isla's case, they are painfully honest with you. But siblings also know exactly which button to press to make you lose your cool in record time. To help keep Isla's executive game on track, she has her own team.

Lev Levy (Max Greenfield, "The Neighborhood") is Isla's eternally supportive and positive fiancé, a pediatrician with a heart of gold. Brenda Song ("Dollface") is Ali Lee, the Waves' intimidating chief of staff and a longtime friend of Isla's.

One of the first hurdles in Isla's reign as president is mending the backbone of the Waves, Marcus Winfield (Toby Sanderman, "The Game"). Winfield has two championship rings, two Olympic gold medals and 12 all-star game invites to his name, but so many years on the top has the legendary athlete withdrawing from his team.

Also on the Los Angeles Waves team roster are Chet Hanks ("Your Honour") as point guard Travis Bugg; Uche Agada ("Rise," 2022) as rookie Dyson Gibbs; and Dane DiLiegro ("Imaginary," 2024) as Eastern European Waves player Badrag Knauss. Jay Ellis ("Insecure") is Waves coach Jay Brown, a former player who has brought home several championships. Jay's quiet magnetism works for the team, but it may prove too strong for Isla to keep things strictly professional.

The cast also includes Fabrizio Guido ("Perry Mason") as Jackie Moreno, a popcorn vendor at the Waves' arena who receives a dream promotion; Keyla Monterroso Mejia ("Curb Your Enthusiasm") as Jackie's cousin Ana, a personal injury lawyer; and Roberto Sanchez ("Palm Royale") as Stephen Ramirez, the head of the Waves board.

Sitcom virtuoso Mindy Kaling ("The Office") executive produces "Running Point" alongside "The Mindy Project" collaborators Ike Barinholtz and David Stassen. With two of her latest comedies — Netflix's "Never I Ever" and Max's "The Sex Lives of College Girls" — having recently aired their series finales, Kaling talked to Netflix's Tudum about the upcoming series.

"I really love writing shows about ambitious women," the actor-writer-producer shared, "whether they're a 15-year-old girl in the Valley or the president of a basketball team. We wanted to ensure that audiences could see themselves in the characters' struggles and triumphs."

Checking in with
KATE HUDSON

If it seems that Kate Hudson has focused more on singing lately, her new show proves that acting remains a focus for her as well.

Though she appeared in Season 2 of Apple TV+'s "Truth Be Told," Hudson is a series lead for the first time in "Running Point," a Netflix comedy that debuts Thursday, Feb. 27. With former "The Mindy Project" colleagues Mindy Kaling and Ike Barinholtz among its creators and executive producers, it casts Hudson as the seemingly unlikely new president of her family's Los Angeles basketball franchise, assuming the job after one of her brothers (Justin Theroux, "White House Plumbers") has to resign. She then has to prove her suitability for the position.

"Running Point" co-stars include Max Greenfield (who also continues on CBS and Paramount+'s "The Neighborhood"), Brenda Song ("Dollface"), Drew Tarver ("The Other Two") and Scott MacArthur ("The Righteous Gemstones").

Also well-known as Goldie Hawn's ("Private Benjamin," 1980) daughter, Hudson hasn't done a lot of television work, but she made appearances in two beloved and well-remembered Fox series. Hudson was a guest star in a 1996 episode of "Party of Five" that pre-dated her movie credits, then she was seen in a 2012-13 guest arc on "Glee" as Cassandra July, who was Rachel Berry's (Lea Michele, "Scream Queens") dance teacher at a New York dramatic arts college.

The overall theme of "Glee" was more pertinent to Hudson than many people may have realized at the time. Her Oscar-nominated performance as Penny Lane in the 2000 movie "Almost Famous" had musical links, but she had been writing song lyrics before that. At the height of the coronavirus pandemic in 2020, she decided to get serious about generating tunes, and a major result was her 2024 debut album, "Glorious."

As well as performing them, she co-wrote all 12 of its songs — many of them with her fiancé, Danny Fujikawa.

While she gained wide attention for that project, with more music likely to come from her, acting is also keeping Hudson "Running Point" for now.
