Seasons of love: Fey, Carell among vacationing friends in 'The Four Seasons'

The intricacies of adult friendships have long fascinated the world of social studies due, in large part, to the levels of engagement and energy required to maintain a happy, successful relationship.

According to Jeffrey A. Hall, a University of Kansas communications studies professor and author of the 2019 article "How many hours does it take to make a friend?" in the Journal of Social and Personal Relationships, "although [a] good friendship can develop after spending 120–160 [hours] together over three weeks, 200+ [hours] is likely needed over six weeks for friends to become good/best friends." Despite this, Americans, on average, typically "only spend about 41 [minutes] a day socializing."

Needless to say, maintaining an existing adult friendship can be just as difficult when the pressures and responsibilities of daily life get in the way — a fact that presents itself, amid other realistic complications, in Netflix's new buddy comedy series "The Four Seasons," premiering Thursday, May 1, on the popular streaming service.

"The Four Seasons" follows a group of three couples who, amid all of life's complications and curveballs, resolve to take a trip together each season of the year. But when one couple files for divorce, tensions rise within the friend group, and all their plans seem to fall by the wayside.

The series, comprised of eight episodes, takes heavy inspiration from the 1981 Alan Alda ("M*A*S*H") written and directed film of the same name starring Carol Burnett ("The Carol Burnett Show"), Rita Moreno ("West Side Story," 1961), Len Cariou ("Blue Bloods"), Jack Weston ("Wait Until Dark," 1967), Sandy Dennis ("Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?," 1966) and Alda himself.

The 1980s comedy-drama was relatively well received upon its release, with New York Times reviewer Janet Maslin praising the comfort of the film by writing that "even the occasional confrontations ... have a soothing air."

"No one in 'The Four Seasons' ever goes to bed angry," Maslin continued, adding, "and there's no particular reason to want them to."

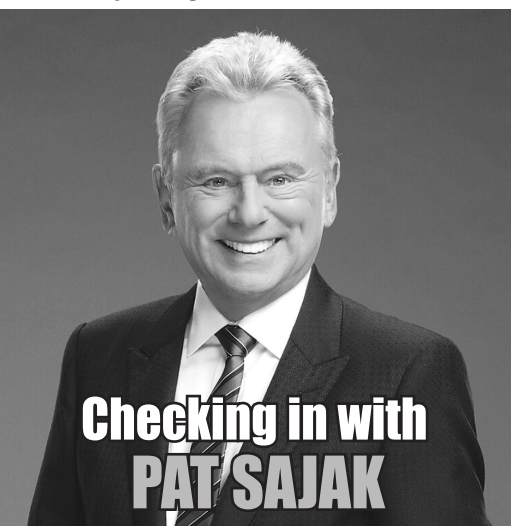

And while the 2025 "Four Seasons" series manages to update the couples' issues, interests and relationships with one another in a believable way across significantly more airtime, series star and co-creator Tina Fey ("Saturday Night Live") says she and fellow creators Lang Fisher ("Never Have I Ever") and Tracey Wigfield ("The Mindy Project") have tried to maintain the same level of comfort in the reimagining as was provided by its source material.

"I hope audiences feel like they are inside a big sweater with us, and also having a dinner party with us," Fey told Tudum ahead of the series release. "I hope that any of the joy and warmth that we all feel for each other all transfers to them, and that we are a comfort and provide some laughs for them in their home."

"The Four Seasons" stars Colman Domingo ("Fear the Walking Dead") as Danny, Will Forte ("The Last Man on Earth") as Jack, Kerri Kenney-Silver ("Reno 911!") as Anne, Marco Calvani ("Borgia") as Claude and Fey as Kate, with her former "Date Night" (2010) co-star Steve Carell as Nick — a "perfect" cast, according to Calvani, who attributes their connection either to industry-based talent or "a mix of magic and luck" (per Tudum).

Those who thought Pat Sajak was done with "Wheel of Fortune" are in for a surprise. While the veteran television personality left the syndicated weeknight version of the game show last year — with Ryan Seacrest ("American Idol") succeeding him as host, alongside continuing letter-turning "Wheel" staple Vanna White — he's returning for one more round of putting personalities through the paces of "buying" letters and guessing phrases. Sajak will be back in his familiar role for ABC's latest stanza of "Celebrity Wheel of Fortune," which begins Wednesday, April 30.

Guests will have the opportunity to win $1 million for their chosen charity while playing the contest. The familiar faces spinning the wheel and sharing banter with Sajak will include Josh Gad ("Wolf Like Me"), Tiffany Haddish ("The Afterparty"), Regina Hall ("Black Monday"), Justin Long ("Live Free or Die Hard," 2007), Joe Manganiello ("Nonnas," 2025), Katharine McPhee ("Scorpion"), Randall Park ("The Residence"), Andrew Rannells ("Another Simple Favor," 2025) and Rainn Wilson ("The Office").

Sajak has kept a reasonably low profile since his weeknight "Wheel" tenure ended last May, though he recently was pictured attending the Los Angeles Dodgers' opening-day baseball game with his daughter Maggie, who serves as a social media correspondent. He's scheduled to portray the nemesis in a Honolulu, Hawaii, midsummer staging of "Prescription: Murder," the play and later TV movie that introduced the detective character Columbo.

However, three-time Daytime Emmy winner Sajak is destined to remain best-known as a television host. He was a weathercaster on Los Angeles' KNBC-TV when he was hired to join "Wheel" in 1981, and though he left the show's daytime version in 1989 (at a time when it briefly moved from NBC to CBS) to preside over his own CBS late-night talk show that lasted about a year, he continued with the syndicated nighttime edition of "Wheel" — and stayed with that until the much-heralded end of his run in 2024.

For viewers who may have been missing him, Sajak's temporary return to home screens on "Celebrity Wheel of Fortune" is likely to be a welcome taste of nostalgia as well as a reliable piece of ongoing entertainment.

Birthdate: Oct. 26, 1946

Birthplace: Chicago, Ill.

Current residences: Los Angeles and Severna Park, Md.

Marital status: Married; he has a daughter, "Wheel of Fortune" social media correspondent Maggie, and a son named Patrick
