Alexander Skarsgård stars in "Murderbot"

Dead-end job: 'Murderbot' reluctantly joins Apple TV+'s workforce

Checking in with JOHN WALSH

For John Walsh, "America's Most Wanted" remains more than a television show: it's a personal crusade.

The longtime advocate for crime victims knows the desire for justice extremely well, since he and his family pursued it themselves for many years after Adam, the then-only child of Walsh and his wife Reve, was abducted and killed in 1981. Their story was told in the 1983 NBC movie "Adam" — in which Walsh was played by Daniel J. Travanti ("Hill Street Blues") — and Walsh became a television personality himself through his many appearances discussing the case.

In 1988, Walsh set out to essentially deputize viewers by recounting true, unsolved crimes on Fox's "America's Most Wanted," where the reality series has resumed on Mondays for the third season of its current incarnation and its 28th season overall. While Elizabeth Vargas, now of the channel NewsNation, was the initial host of the revival, Walsh was brought back to the show for its second season, sharing the hosting duties with his son Callahan, who continues with him on the program. Additionally, the Fox special "America's Most Wanted: John Walsh's Dirty Dozen" premieres Wednesday, May 14.

Even when he hasn't actively been doing the series, Walsh has remained a symbol for advocating for involvement of the public has information that will help result in the capture of fugitives. He has continued that activism in other shows he has done, and on occasion, he has been a commercial spokesman for products and services meant to deter criminal activities.

Since it was originated, "America's Most Wanted" has contributed (according to Fox) to the capture of 1200 fugitives and the recovery of 65 missing children — and with or without a related TV show, that's a mission that never ends. John

At one point or another, pretty much everyone has wished they could be doing anything other than the job at hand, like tuning out a co-worker's chatter to binge the latest series, for instance. Escapism is a hallmark of being stuck in a mundane workplace, an experience that should resonate with viewers of Apple TV+'s newest series, "Murderbot." Based on the Hugo and Nebula award-winning series by author Martha Wells, "Murderbot" adapts the events of the first novella, "All Systems Red," the series premieres Friday, May 16, on the streamer.

With a title like "Murderbot," you'd be inclined to think this is an action-packed sci-fi thriller about a robot specifically designed for violence — and you'd be right, at least in part. While the titular character may be a purpose-built killing machine, it's not just a robot: it's a part-android, part-cloned human security construct. The SecUnit, played by Alexander Skarsgård ("True Blood"), is a walking insurance policy created by the megacorporations that control much of humanity's space-faring domain. SecUnits are required on any planetary expedition to protect the human team members and, more importantly, the company's investment. Therefore, "Murderbot" is not just an action-packed sci-fi thriller, it's also a twisted workplace comedy.

"Murderbot's" SecUnit is unique, as it's managed to hack its governor module, giving itself free will. Upon breaking its shackles, it does as any indentured killing machine would, names itself Murderbot and downloads thousands of hours of soap operas from the company media feeds. Although Murderbot is confused and annoyed by the messy "human-ness" of those in its charge, it's good at its job — and needs to keep up appearances for survival. Behind the faceplate, however, it just wants to be left alone with its stories, though it inevitably must do its job.

The humans that Murderbot is assigned to protect are a planetary survey team led by Dr. Mensah (Noma Dumezweni, "Black Earth Rising"). Hailing from a system outside of the Corporation Rim, Mensah and her team struggle with the cutthroat profit motives of their employer, reluctantly agreeing to the terms of their contract — including the need for a SecUnit. The survey team — played by David Dastmalchian ("Late Night with the Devil," 2023), Sabrina Wu ("Joy Ride, 2023), Tattiana Jones ("Orphan Black: Echoes"), Akshay Khanna ("The Doll Factory") and Tamara Podemski ("Coroner") — would rather forgo all corporate meddling but opt to simply ignore the SecUnit instead.

The indifference to its presence suits Murderbot just fine, since the humans' interpersonal relationship drama is irrational, emotional and unpredictable. Hiding behind its mask, Murderbot would much rather engage emotionally through the safety of its obsessive binge of "The Rise and Fall of Sanctuary Moon." The pulpy, over-the-top sci-fi soap opera exists as a show-within-a-show that stars John Cho ("Star Trek," 2009), Jack McBrayer ("30 Rock"), DeWanda Wise ("Three Women") and Clark Gregg ("Agents of S.H.I.E.L.D."). "Sanctuary Moon" serves as both escapism between saving the team from hostile threats and a sort of road map for Murderbot as it navigates how to interact with the humans post-rescue.

Despite Murderbot's desire to be left alone, its evolving relationship with Mensah's team is central to the story. In an interview with Vanity Fair, showrunner Chris Weitz describes this reluctant dynamic: "They're not really cut out for this. Murderbot feels it has to keep them from dying. It's not really because it necessarily cares about them at first. It has this thing of being good at its job in spite of everything."

Walsh is still getting as many people as possible involved in it, thanks to Fox and his own enduring determination.

To celebrate that enduring legacy, Walsh hosts "America's Most Wanted: John Walsh's Dirty Dozen," which premieres Wednesday, May 14, on Fox.
