Checking in with UMA THURMAN

Uma Thurman may not be playing The Bride of "Kill Bill" fame again, but that doesn't mean she has given up on action tales.

The actress is back in fighting mode big-time in "The Old Guard 2," a Netflix movie sequel that begins streaming Wednesday, July 2. The follow-up to a 2020 film returns Charlize Theron — no stranger to on-screen battles herself, as she appeared prominently in "Atomic Blonde" (2017) — to the role of Andy, who has lost her powers as a so-called immortal, having lived for thousands of years. She finds herself with a new enemy in Discord (Thurman), deemed to be "the first of the Immortals." And when they collide, it's major.

Based on graphic novels by co-screenwriter Greg Rucka and illustrator Leandro Fernandez, the new adventure (for which Theron is a producer as well) also features franchise newcomer Henry Golding ("Crazy Rich Asians"). Additional returnees from the first "Old Guard" picture include KiKi Layne ("If Beale Street Could Talk," 2018), Chiwetel Ejiofor ("12 Years a Slave," 2013) and Matthias Schoenaerts ("Django").

Thurman famously displayed and endured much physicality in writer-director Quentin Tarantino's "Kill Bill" projects, released in 2003 and 2004, and she was hurt in a car accident toward the end of production. While those films generally are deemed the peak of her work in the action genre thus far, she also has done other movies in it. Among them have been Tarantino's "Pulp Fiction" (1994), "Batman & Robin" (1997), "The Avengers" (1998), "Paycheck" (2003), the also-comedic "My Super Ex-Girlfriend" (2006), "Percy Jackson & the Olympians" (2010) — in which she played the mythical Medusa — and "The Kill Room" (2023).

After two 2022 series, Apple TV+'s "Suspicion" and Showtime's "Super Pumped," Thurman is becoming more visible on the home screen again. She'll soon be seen as a billionaire's (Peter Dinklage, "Game of Thrones") security chief in the Paramount+ With Showtime sequel series "Dexter: Resurrection," restoring Michael C. Hall ("Dexter") to the title role and slated to premiere July 11. First, though, Thurman will duke it out against someone else who can give as good as she gets in "The Old Guard 2."

Deep beneath the fabled Pillars of Halvar lies Viking treasure waiting to be plucked from the abyss. The only thing stopping one enterprising prisoner from liberating it is a vessel that can reach it. Inspired by the enduring science fiction novel "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea" by author Jules Verne, "Nautilus," premiering Sunday, June 29, on AMC and AMC+, tells the story of how Nemo took the helm of the infamous submarine.

Portrayed by "Star Trek: Discovery" star Shazad Latif, audiences meet Capt. Nemo in "Nautilus" as a prisoner of the East India Mercantile Company. An Indian prince stripped of his status and ripped from his family, Nemo is forced to work for the company, designing the engines of a secret submersible, the Nautilus.

In an act of revenge against the people who took everything from him, Nemo plots to steal the ship and set off on an adventure to retrieve buried riches. With a hastily-assembled crew on board, Nemo leaves the penal colony in the periscope's rear-view, but the East India Mercantile Company are not willing to let the Nautilus go without a fight.

Also starring in the 10-part adventure series are Georgia Flood ("Apples Never Fall") as hostage-turned-crew member Humility Lucas; Céline Menville ("Emily in Paris") as Loti; Thierry Frémont ("Das Boot") as Benoit; Richard E. Grant ("The Franchise") as White Rajah; Anna Torv ("The Newsreader") as Revna; and Noah Taylor ("So Long, Marianne") as Capt. Mogg.

It's nearly impossible to quietly execute a prisoner uprising, and Nemo's big departure only gives him and his crew a bit of a head start.

"She is mine, I want her back," Director Crawley (Damien Garvey, "The Artful Dodger") says of the pilfered vessel in the trailer. He is talking to the right guy, Youngblood (Jacob Collins-Levy, "Young Wal-lander"), who tells Crawley: "If you're looking for someone to bring Nemo back in chains, I'm your man."

Along the way, Nemo and the crew of the Nautilus encounter formidable deep sea creatures and explore the incredible unknown landscape of the ocean floor on the way to their destination of the North East Passage. Chased at sea and on land by those who want either the same fortune they are after or the treasure of the Nautilus, Nemo and the crew must work together to maintain their freedom.

"Nautilus" was created and written by James Dormer ("Devils") and series directors include Michael Matthews ("Love and Monsters," 2020), Ben C. Lucas ("The Wilds") and Isabelle Sieb ("Shetland").

Latif, who will be seen next as Edgar Linton in the buzzy Emerald Fennell ("Promising Young Woman," 2020) -directed adaptation of the timeless Emily Bronte-penned novel "Wuthering Heights" early next year, spoke to Yahoo UK about portraying a new angle of another well-known character.

"It's very rare you get the origin story of a character who's usually in the old film — the James Mason ["A Star Is Born," 1954] film and all the iterations of it — he's a mysterious character," the "Toast of London" actor explained.

"In the book as well, you don't really know his past, he's very vague and that's sort of the thing, but in this we get to explore this very flawed, very complex character who's on a ship with 10 other brown men, we rarely get shows like that," Latif continued.

Exploring new depths, "Nautilus" premieres Sunday, June 29, on AMC and AMC+.
