Case file thaw: Maggie Q reopens cold cases in 'Ballard'

BY JAY BOBBIN

Checking in with
JULIE CHEN MOONVES

If "Big Brother" is coming back, you know Julie Chen Moonves can't be far behind. The longtime host of the CBS and Paramount+ reality competition series returns to that role as new houseguests assemble — then begin vying to be the last one standing, with a $750,000 cash prize on the line — as the 27th season starts Thursday, July 10. That episode will be 90 minutes long, as will the one the following Sunday. After that, Wednesdays will be added to the weekly schedule for the rest of the summer, with all episodes then being an hour in length, with the tense eviction episodes airing on Thursdays.

Additionally, there will be extra doses of "Big Brother" this time, with a "Big Brother: Unlocked" companion series that will be shown every other Friday beginning July 25. Additional footage will be shown, and former houseguests will assess how the new season's game is going. Also, live feeds from the "Big Brother" house will resume on Paramount+ and Pluto TV.

Chen Moonves has been synonymous with "Big Brother" since the show's American debut in 2000, taking critiques of her hosting style in stride. She has had public fun with references to her as the "Chenbot," and the series has turned out to be the longest constant in her broadcasting career, which began with her doing straight news in a number of other venues.

Though her first prominent job was with then-ABC (and now-NBC) affiliate WDTN in Dayton, Ohio, in the mid-1990s, Chen Moonves has been a CBS employee since leaving that station. She spent a couple of years on the air at New York's WCBS-TV before moving to the news division at the full network, anchoring the weekday "CBS Morning News" and also serving as news anchor of "CBS This Morning." She then became a co-host of the latter program's successor, "The Early Show."

The sheer number of true crime podcasts and documentaries available is evidence that people love to learn about crime. In journalism, the phrase "If it bleeds, it leads" is a common rhyme to ensure a gripping story with as much detail as possible. On the police side of crime, however, a lot of time is spent on the actual investigation — until, that is, there are no leads left. These unsolved cases are frequently referred to as "cold cases," and the number of them is rising.

According to an April 2023 piece by NPR reporter Eric Westervelt, "The rate at which murders are solved or 'cleared' has been declining for decades" and "dropped to slightly below 50% in 2020 — a new historic low." He goes on to write that "several big cities, including Chicago, have seen the number of murder cases resulting in at least one arrest dip into the low to mid-30% range"; a troubling statistic, to say the least.

Of course, another city experiencing a high number of cold cases is Los Angeles. The second-largest city in the U.S. by population size, the Los Angeles Police Department — like many metropolitan police forces — has been plagued by a growing number of unsolved mysteries for years. Luckily, the LAPD does have a cold case unit dedicated to getting justice for the families of the victims of unsolved crimes — and that is the subject of Prime Video's newest procedural series.

"Ballard," the new action series from author Michael Connelly's Bosch universe, premieres Wednesday, July 9, on Prime Video.

"Ballard" follows titular LAPD detective Renée Ballard, played by "Nikita" and "Mission: Impossible III" (2007) actress Maggie Q, as she commands a new and chronically underfunded cold case unit within the department. Acutely aware of the "poor reputation of the LAPD," Ballard is determined to get to the bottom of some of the force's biggest stumbers — as well as a few cases that didn't get the attention they initially deserved.

Additionally, as reported by online entertainment news source Screen-Rant, "Ballard will team up with retired detective Thomas Laffont [John Carroll Lynch, "American Horror Story"], who uses his years of experience to give her advice. It is also known that Renée will uncover a strange conspiracy in her investigations, and that will likely be the bulk of the show's overarching story."

While the 10-episode series itself is brand new, fans of the Titus Welliver ("Argo," 2012)-led Amazon series "Bosch," which ran from 2014 to 2021, and particularly those of its successor, "Bosch: Legacy," may already be acquainted with Q's Ballard, given that the character was introduced during "Legacy's" Season 3 finale. In a "first look" article from May 2024, Deadline writer Denise Petski teases actor Welliver's return as Det. Bosch while also drawing attention to the real-life inspiration for Q's leading character: real-life LAPD Det. Mitzi Roberts.

Roberts, who retired from the force in April 2024 after 29 years of service, is a noted influence for Connelly's Ballard character, who first appeared in print in his 2017 novel "The Late Show." In a November 2024 interview with Orlando-based radio station WMMO 98.9FM, Connelly shared how Roberts helped him over the years while writing his Bosch books, and how she went on to inspire Ballard.

"I go back to a cadre of people to help me," Connelly said of his writing process, referencing the care he takes to maintain as much procedural accuracy as possible in his novels. "One of those people that helped me over the years was Mitzi Roberts, who is a homicide detective with the LAPD."

Interested in Roberts' experience as a woman in a male-dominated field, Connelly said, "I started talking to Mitzi specifically about building a character, a female character. ... So, when I'm writing about Renée, I don't send my questions or my texts to a lot of people. I send them to one: Mitzi Roberts."

Chen Moonves did early seasons of "Big Brother" concurrently with her "Early Show" duties, then kept the nighttime role when her tenure with the weekday CBS show "The Talk" began. She stayed with that venture as one of its several hosts — who also included its creator, Sara Gilbert ("The Conners") — through its eighth season.

While she was once one of the most visible personalities on CBS throughout the broadcast day, Chen Moonves has been able to keep summers as a prime time for herself thanks to "Big Brother," and that tradition is about to continue.
