2026 BASKETBALL PREVIEW

A look into the basketball season for elementary schools through high school

White County High School girls' basketball season preview

CALEB ANDREWS
Editor/Writer

The White County High School Warriorettes are preparing to take the court for the 2026–2027 girls basketball season with plenty of momentum behind them after an outstanding year that brought statewide attention to Sparta and White County.

Coming off a 34–6 season, the Warriorettes proved they could compete with some of the best teams in Tennessee. Their run through the postseason carried them to the TSSAA Class AAA State Championship game, where they finished as state runner-up. Along the way, White County earned victories over Covington and Cocke County before falling to Dyersburg in the championship contest.

That postseason success has given the program something to build upon as a new season begins. With expectations raised by last year's accomplishments, the Warriorettes will look to carry that same determination, teamwork, and competitive spirit into the months ahead.

Head coach Michael Dodgen and the coaching staff will work to prepare the team for the challenges of district competition and the long road toward postseason play. As with every new season, the team will need to establish its identity, find consistency on both ends of the floor, and continue developing the skills necessary to compete against tough opponents.

The Warriorettes compete in District 7 of Class AAA, where each game provides an opportunity to strengthen their position and prepare for the postseason. A demanding schedule will test the team's ability to respond to adversity, make adjustments, and perform when the pressure is greatest.

White County is scheduled to open its season at home against Marshall County on November 17, followed by a road matchup with Cannon County on November 19. Those early contests will offer the team its first opportunities to establish a rhythm and begin putting its preseason preparation into action.

Beyond the wins and losses, the Warriorettes also represent their school and community each time they step onto the court. Last season's accomplishments gave White County fans plenty to celebrate, and the support of the community will remain an important part of the team's journey.

As the 2026–2027 season gets underway, the Warriorettes will have a new opportunity to write another chapter in White County basketball history. With last year's state tournament experience behind them, the team will look to work hard, compete together, and make the most of the season ahead.

White County High School boys' basketball preview

CALEB ANDREWS
Editor/Writer

The White County High School Warriors are preparing to return to the basketball court for the 2026–2027 season, bringing with them valuable experience from last year's campaign and a renewed opportunity to compete against some of the area's strongest programs.

During the 2025–2026 season, the Warriors battled through a challenging schedule before advancing into postseason play. White County reached the Region 3 tournament semifinals, where the team came up short against Cumberland County by a score of 54–48. Although the season ended short of the team's ultimate goal, the experience provided lessons the Warriors can carry into the new year.

As preparations continue, the focus will turn toward building consistency, improving execution, and developing the kind of teamwork necessary to compete throughout a demanding high school basketball season. Every year brings changes, new challenges, and opportunities for players to step forward and contribute to the team's success.

Under head coach E. Mitchell, the Warriors will look to establish their rhythm early while working to improve on both ends of the floor. Strong defense, smart decision-making, rebounding, and taking advantage of scoring opportunities will all be important as White County works through its schedule.

The Warriors are set to open the season at home against Marshall County on November 17. They will then travel to face Cannon County on November 19 before taking on Warren County on the road November 24. These early matchups will give the team an opportunity to measure its progress and begin building momentum for the games ahead.

District competition will provide another important test. With familiar opponents and challenging road games on the schedule, the Warriors will need to remain focused and prepared each time they take the floor. Success will depend not only on individual performances but also on the team's ability to work together, respond to adversity, and maintain its composure in close games.

For White County fans, the upcoming season brings another chance to support the Warriors as they represent their school and community. The dedication shown in practices and games will help determine how far the team can go as the season progresses.

As the 2026–2027 campaign gets underway, the Warriors will have the opportunity to write a new chapter in White County basketball. With hard work, determination, and support from the community, the team will look to make the most of the season and compete for success in the months ahead.

Elementary basketball season brings excitement

CALEB ANDREWS
Editor/Writer

The sound of basketballs bouncing, sneakers squeaking across gym floors, and fans cheering from the bleachers is returning to elementary schools throughout White County as another basketball season gets underway.

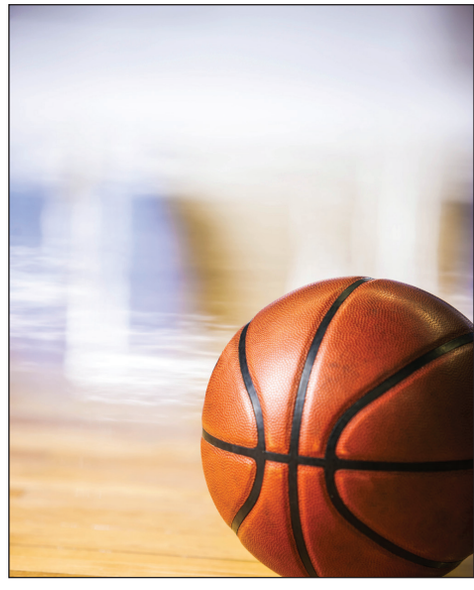

Students, families, and school communities are looking forward to supporting their young athletes as BonDeCroft, Cassville, Doyle, Findlay, Northfield, and Woodland Park elementary schools take part in another season of elementary basketball competition.

For many of these young players, elementary basketball is about much more than winning games. It is an opportunity to learn the fundamentals of the sport, develop confidence, build friendships, and understand the importance of working together as a team.

Each school brings its own school spirit and community pride to the court. Whether playing on their home floor or traveling to compete against another White County school, these young athletes have the opportunity to represent their classmates, teachers, and families.

The season also provides an opportunity for students to develop important life lessons. Coaches help young players understand discipline, teamwork, sportsmanship, and the value of putting forth their best effort. Learning how to handle both victories and defeats is an important part of growing as an athlete and as an individual.

Interesting facts about the sport of basketball

Basketball is an exciting sport with a global footprint. Proof of the global popularity of basketball is evident on both the collegiate and professional hardwoods. In fact, the National Basketball Association noted before the opening night of the 2024-25 season that league rosters featured 125 international players from a record-tying 43 countries across six continents.

The popularity of basketball is undeniable. With so many tuned in to the exciting action, now is an ideal time for fans of basketball to learn some fun facts about the game.

• Michael Jordan, arguably the greatest player of all time, was once cut from his varsity high school team. Debates as to who is the greatest basketball player of all time will likely never cease, but many fans point to the man nicknamed "His Airness." Indeed, Jordan's many accolades include six NBA championships and six NBA Finals Most Valuable Player awards. Fans can be forgiven if they read Jordan's impressive résumé and conclude his skills were identified as superior from the moment he stepped on a court, but the eventual five-time NBA MVP failed to make his high school varsity team in his sophomore year. Jordan ultimately used that as motivation, and averaged more than 25 points per game in his junior and senior seasons.

• Dunking was once illegal at certain levels. Few moments in a basketball game are as exciting as a thunderous slam dunk, but such feats were once outlawed in scholastic and collegiate competitions. Between 1967 and 1976, high school and college players were forbidden from dunking, a rule that might have satisfied basketball purists and assuaged concerns about increasingly tall players dominating the game with simple baskets, but one that undoubtedly confused players. Indeed, in a 2023 media interview, former University of Detroit player Terry Tyler noted his confusion over the rule during his collegiate playing days. Interestingly, Tyler eventually competed in a competition celebrating the slam dunk when he signed up to participate in the 1986 NBA Slam Dunk Contest. That competition was ultimately won by five-foot-seven Spud Webb, a victory that suggests concerns about taller players were misplaced.

• Two men are tied as the tallest players in NBA history. Height is a definite commodity in professional basketball, and two former players are proof of that. Gheorghe Muresan and Manute Bol, who were each seven-foot-seven, currently hold the record as the two tallest men to play in an NBA game. Curiously, Muresan, whose NBA career ended with the New Jersey Nets in 2000, ultimately found himself the second-tallest player in a game played in 2007. In an appearance that was akin to a promotional endeavor by the Maryland Nighthawks of the American Basketball Association, Muresan was temporarily teammates with Chinese player Sun Mingming, who was measured at seven feet, nine inches tall by the Guinness World Records.

• Dribbling was not always part of the game. Skilled ball handlers are a big part of the appeal of modern basketball, but dribbling was not always part of the game. In the early days of basketball, players moved the ball by passing it to one another, standing in place and then throwing the ball to another player. Details are fuzzy, but basketball historians now credit players at Yale University in 1901 as the first to dribble in a game.

The global phenomenon of basketball has a rich and interesting history, and the game people love today once looked vastly different.
